GENERALLY

The Mineral Leasing Act, as amended, 30 U.S.C. § 191 (Supp. III 1985), and 30 CFR 219.100 provide for placement of those royalty payments payable to a state which are under challenge in a suspense account pending resolution of the dispute. Where the district court orders an oil and gas lessee to make additional royalty payments and the lessee complies but appeals from the district court decision, a decision by the Minerals Management Service to distribute the additional and disputed funds to the State of Alaska will be reversed on appeal to the Board of Land Appeals in accordance with 30 U.S.C. § 191 (Supp. III 1985) and 30 CFR 219.100.

Marathon Oil Co., 94 IBLA 78 (Sept. 30, 1986)

When Congress amended 30 U.S.C. § 191 (Supp. III 1985), it included means to protect the royalty beneficiaries from loss due to delay in the collection of the disputed amount. An order to pay the disputed royalty may not be suspended under 30 CFR 243.2 unless the lessee submits a bond "deemed adequate to indemnify the lessor from loss or damage." A bond will not be deemed adequate unless it includes the amount of interest that the disputed royalty would earn during the pendency of the dispute.

No authority is found in this statutory provision for payment of interest to the lessee/payor on any royalty payments ultimately found to be refundable.

DISTRIBUTION OF RECEIPTS

The Mineral Leasing Act, as amended, 30 U.S.C. § 191 (Supp. III 1985), and 30 CFR 219.100 provide for placement of those royalty payments payable to a state which are under challenge in a suspense account pending resolution of the dispute. Sec. 104(a) of the Federal Oil and Gas Royalty Management Act of 1982, amending, sec. 35 of the Mineral Leasing Act of 1920, 30 U.S.C. § 191 (1982), authorizes but does not require retention of challenged royalty payments payable to a state in a suspense account pending resolution of the dispute. No authority is found in this statutory provision for payment of interest to the lessee/payor on any royalty payments ultimately found to be refundable.

FEES AND COMMISSIONS

It is proper for BLM to reject a simultaneous oil and gas lease application submitted with uncollectible filing fees. 43 CFR 3112.2-2(c) (1982) disqualifies simultaneous oil and gas lease applications submitted with uncollectible filing fees and requires payment of the debt as a condition precedent to further participation in the simultaneous leasing program.

FEES AND COMMISSIONS--Continued

It is proper for the Bureau of Land Management to require outfitters to obtain permits and pay user fees for commercial use of the recreation segment of the Rogue River (Applegate River to Grave Creek), even though noncommercial users are not required to pay such fees for use of the same area. Commercial use fees are imposed to recover at least a portion of the cost of issuing and administering the permit and for the privilege to use and opportunity to make a profit on public lands and related waters.

Upper Rogue River Outfitters Ass'n, 93 IBLA 103 (July 23, 1986)

BLM may properly require the holder of a special recreation use permit to pay an annual-use fee for commercial use of public lands in connection with a river rafting operation and limit deduction of off-site transportation expenses in the fee computation to those cases involving transportation of customers more than 200 miles one way.

Where BLM has established a policy of allowing a deduction for all off-site transportation expenses in the computation of the annual-use fee for commercial use of public lands in connection with a river rafting operation, it will not be permitted to retroactively amend that policy to restrict the deduction.

Timber River Rafting, Inc., 95 IBLA 90 (Dec. 29, 1986)

A simultaneous oil and gas lease applicant is not entitled to a refund of his filing fee unless it is established that BLM knew or should have known that the land was situated within a known geologic structure of a producing oil or gas field at the time it posted the land as available for simultaneous leasing.

There is no authority for BLM to refund the adoption fee required under 43 CFR 4750.4-2 when the adopter takes custody of a wild horse, but fails to comply with the terms of the private maintenance and care agreement and governing regulations, thereby justifying BLM in terminating the agreement and reposessing the horse.

Grant F. Morey, 108 IBLA 354 (May 12, 1989)

An amended regulation governing payment of the cost of publishing the notice of a competitive oil and gas lease sale may be applied to a pending matter where, absent intervening rights or countervailing public policy reasons, the amended regulation will benefit the affected party.

Alvin L. Terry, Jr., 110 IBLA 360 (Sept. 14, 1989)

PAYMENTS

Where first-drawn applicants for simultaneous oil and gas leases violate provisions of 43 CFR 3112.6-1, by failing to submit the first year's advance rental payment in the proper office within 30 days of notice to do so, and by failing to offer payment personally or through an attorney-in-fact, the offers must be rejected.

Satellite 8307193 et al., 85 IBLA 357 (Mar. 25, 1985)

"Tender." Placing a check for annual rental for oil and gas leases in the mails does not constitute a tender of payment of annual rental, within the meaning of 43 CFR 3108.2-2(a)(1). Rather, a lessee makes a tender of payment only when he submits payment to the BLM office administering his leases, and when BLM has the opportunity either to receive or decline it. Accordingly, placing rental in the mails does not constitute a tender of payment which would allow the Department to consider the merits of a Class I petition for reinstatement of an oil and gas lease terminated for failure to make timely payment of annual rental.

Richard G. Fowler, 89 IBLA 175 (Oct. 11, 1985)

Under sec. 4 of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1333(a)(2)(A) (1982), the civil and criminal laws of each adjacent state, now in effect or hereafter adopted, amended, or repealed, are declared to be the law of the United States for that portion of the subsoil and seabed of the Outer Continental Shelf which would be within the area of the state if its boundaries were extended seaward to the outer margin of the Outer Continental Shelf to the extent that such laws are applicable and not inconsistent with 43 U.S.C. §§ 1331-1356 (1982) or with other Federal laws and regulations of the Secretary now in effect or hereafter adopted. Application of Louisiana law, calling for 7 percent simple interest, the legal rate at the time the unit agreement was made, was proper to compensate a lessee for the time value of money held by a unit participant who produced unitized substances in excess of its allocated share.

Sun Oil Co. et al., 91 IBLA 1 (Feb. 28, 1986) 93 I.D. 95

If a rental charge required by 43 CFR 2803.1-2 is not paid when due, and such default continues for 30 days after notice, BLM may take action to terminate a right-of-way grant issued pursuant to Title V of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. §§ 1761-1771 (1982). When the holder of a right-of-way grant has not paid rent for over 2 years, BLM may properly terminate the right-of-way grant.

A single personal check covering four competitive oil and gas lease bid deposits is not an acceptable form of remittance under 43 CFR 3120.4-1, which requires remittances to be submitted in the form specified in the competitive sale notice, when that notice requires bidders to submit separate bids with a bid deposit by guaranteed remittance, i.e., cash, cashier's check, or postal money order.

George H. Fentress, 99 IBLA 184 (Oct. 13, 1987)

Under 43 U.S.C. § 1337(g)(2), the Department is not required to invest a state's share of revenues. It may instead disburse them to the state as soon as they have been transferred from the Treasury's general suspense account to the special account created by sec. 1337(g)(2).

Issues Regarding Late Payment Interest & Civil Penalties Related to Offshore Oil & Gas Leases Governed by § 8(g) of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act, M-36956 (Jan. 14, 1988) 95 I.D. 203

The holder of an Outer Continental Shelf oil and gas lease who timely pays royalty in kind, rather than in money, may not be assessed a late fee pursuant to 30 CFR 218.150(d), even if it failed to accurately report the volume of the production with the result that the United States failed to collect the proper amount of money when it sold that production to third parties.

Mobil Oil Corp., Mobil Oil Exploration & Producing Southeast Inc., 107 IBLA 332 (Mar. 14, 1989)

The Minerals Management Service is authorized to impose late payment charges or exact interest as compensation for the loss of use of money due but not paid as royalties.

Mesa Petroleum Co., 108 IBLA 149 (Apr. 5, 1989)

ACCOUNTS--ContinuedREFUNDS

BLM must reject a noncompetitive oil and gas lease offer for acquired lands pursuant to 43 CFR 3112.5-2(b) where the land sought to be leased is determined to be within a known geologic structure after a simultaneous oil and gas lease drawing but prior to lease issuance. In such circumstances, the offeror is not entitled to a refund of the filing fee submitted with her lease application or interest on the first year's advance rental submitted with her lease offer.

Evelyn D. Ruckstuhl, 91 IBLA 384 (Apr. 28, 1986)

Failure of the high bidder at a competitive oil and gas lease sale to execute a lease, tender the balance of the bonus bid, and pay the first year's lease rental within 30 days of notice to do so, results in forfeiture of the deposit submitted with the high bid. Refund of the deposit because offeror elects after the sale to withdraw his offer is not allowed.

D. B. Allsup, R. B. Allsup, 92 IBLA 197 (June 12, 1986)

If the Director, Minerals Management Service, erroneously refuses to suspend a decision regarding payment of additional royalties and requires an oil and gas lessee to pay the disputed royalty instead of furnishing a bond, the amount actually paid was "not required * * * by applicable law" under 43 U.S.C. § 1734(c) (1982), and may be refunded under authority of that provision.

Blackhawk Coal Co. (On Reconsideration), 92 IBLA 365 (July 1, 1986)

Refunds of advance rental payments tendered in connection with noncompetitive over-the-counter oil and gas lease offers which are rejected or withdrawn prior to lease issuance are properly issued to the offeror(s), the real party(ies) in interest, pursuant to sec. 304(c) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1734(c) (1982).

A simultaneous oil and gas lease applicant is not entitled to a refund of his filing fee unless it is established that BLM knew or should have known that the land was situated within a known geologic structure of a producing oil or gas field at the time it posted the land as available for simultaneous leasing.

Kathleen M. Blake et al., 96 IBLA 61 (Feb. 27, 1987)

Where a noncompetitive oil and gas lease is terminated for failure to timely make annual rental payments, and rental payments are made after the termination pending a BLM decision on a petition seeking class I reinstatement of the lease, BLM may properly return the rentals as excess payments pursuant to 43 U.S.C. § 1734(c) (1982), once it denies the reinstatement petition. However, in the absence of statutory provisions, no interest may be paid by the Government on such refunds.

Amoco Production Co., 101 IBLA 152 (Feb. 9, 1988)

Where the evidence establishes that a high bidder predicated his bid at a competitive oil and gas lease sale upon a BLM memorandum which erroneously reported the amount of funds held in an escrow account attributable to the subject parcel, the Board will rescind the offer and direct BLM to refund appellant's bid deposit.

C. Craig Folsom, 101 IBLA 198 (Feb. 22, 1988)

MMS is not bound by the terms of a consent agreement in which the lessee and the Department of Energy settle all claims and disputes with regard to overcharges in sales of crude oil. MMS properly ordered the lessee to pay the amount, plus late payment charges, which the lessee had withheld from royalty payments as representing MMS' proportionate share of the settlement amount contained in the consent agreement.

Although MMS is not bound by the terms of a consent agreement in which the lessee and the Department of Energy settle all claims and disputes with regard to overcharges in sales of crude oil from numerous leases, including a Federal lease, the Board will set aside MMS' denial of the lessee's request for a refund of the overcharge allocable to the Federal lease and remand the case for a determination of whether the lessee can show, independently of the consent agreement, whether it is entitled to a refund under 43 U.S.C. § 1734(c) (1982).

Union Texas Petroleum Corp., 103 IBLA 241 (July 26, 1988)

Refunds of advance rental payments tendered in connection with noncompetitive oil and gas lease offers which are rejected, are properly issued to an offeror pursuant to sec. 304(c) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1734(c) (1982). However, in absence of statutory provisions, no interest may be paid by the Government on such refunds.

Thomas J. Florence, 103 IBLA 255 (July 27, 1988)

One filing a request for repayment of excess royalties, paid with respect to gas produced from a particular Outer Continental Shelf oil and gas lease, is not precluded by the 2-year filing provision in sec. 10(a) of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1339(a) (1982) from recovering monies paid when the request was filed within the 2-year period but failed to correctly identify the lease and the amount paid.

Chevron U.S.A. Inc., 105 IBLA 21 (Oct. 12, 1988)

It was proper for BLM to cancel a sale of public land following acceptance of high bids when the sale was found to be contrary to an injunction entered in Nat'l Wildlife Federation v. Burford, 676 F. Supp. 280 (D.D.C. 1986), aff'd, 835 F.2d 305 (D.C. Cir. 1987). In such case a refund of deposits submitted with the high bids was proper. However, in the

Gordon L. Hardy, 106 IBLA 227 (Dec. 27, 1988)

ACCRETION
(See also Boundaries, Public Lands--if included in this Index.)

When a patent to the land incorporates by reference a description of the land as being bounded by a river and the land described in the color-of-title application is for the land accreted to the applicant's property, the applicant as the riparian owner has title to the accreted lands. Neither a color-of-title application nor a sale of the lands to the applicant by BLM would be proper.

Holly H. Baca, Estate of Anthony K. Baca, 97 IBLA 126 (Apr. 30, 1987)

In apportioning accreted lands between adjoining sections, BLM properly disregards partition lines previously determined by proportioning the new frontage between two zero accretion points, one of which is within an area which has subsequently been determined to have formed through the process of avulsion.

In apportioning accreted land between adjoining sections, BLM is not required to use a privately surveyed partition line established by the perpendicular method where the private surveyor had no adequate justification for not employing the proportionate shoreline method and, thus, the line was not within the allowable limit of error.

Where BLM has failed to adequately justify not employing the proportionate shoreline method for apportioning accreted land between adjoining sections and that approach will result in an equitable apportionment of the accreted land, the Board will remand the case to BLM for adoption of that method in a corrected survey.

110 IBLA 25 (July 7, 1989)

ACQUIRED LANDS

Land acquired by the United States does not become public land by the mere process of its acquisition and, in the absence of specific statutory direction to the contrary, is not open for location of mining claims under 30 U.S.C. § 22 (1982).

Silver Buckle Mines, Inc., 84 IBLA 306 (Jan. 7, 1985)
Ted Thompson, 98 IBLA 251 (July 7, 1987)

Lands which were acquired under the Weeks Act for a national forest are not subject to location of mining claims under 30 U.S.C. § 22 (1982). Such "acquired lands" are properly distinguished from "public domain" or "public lands" withdrawn or reserved for national forest purposes which are subject to mineral entry under 16 U.S.C. §§ 475, 478 (1982).

ACQUIRED LANDS--Continued

Land acquired by the United States does not become public land by the mere process of its acquisition, and, in the absence of specific legislative or other authoritative direction to the contrary is not subject to leasing under the mineral leasing laws until the Department formally opens such land for disposition.

Oil and gas lease offers received over-the-counter during the period established by an opening order are considered to have been filed simultaneously, and priority among them is determined by drawing in accordance with 43 CFR 1821.2-3.

Roberts & Koch, 95 IBLA 239 (Jan. 16, 1987)

Where land has been conveyed to the United States reserving to the grantors the exclusive right to prospect for and exploit the oil and gas underlying the land and that reservation has been extended beyond its initial term by production, in accordance with the terms of the deed, the United States has, during the extended term, no interest in any of that oil and gas sufficient to form the basis for claiming compensatory royalty because of drainage.

ACT OF FEBRUARY 8, 1887

Under regulation 43 CFR 2091.5, authorized officers will determine by any means in their power whether any public lands in their districts are occupied by Indians and the location of their improvements, and will suspend all applications made by persons other than the Indian occupants, upon lands in the possession of Indians who have made improvements of any value whatever thereon.

An Indian seeking an Indian allotment in Alaska under the Act of Feb. 8, 1887, has not established settlement under the Act or demonstrated sufficient use and possession to prevent the segregative effect of a grazing lease from attaching by settlement efforts consisting of brief visits to the vicinity of the allotment lands, one extended 30-day stay in the vicinity of the allotment lands, and insubstantial improvements on the land.

Henrietta Roberts Vaden v. Bureau of Land Management et al., 96 IBLA 198 (Mar. 19, 1987)

Although neither sec. 4 of the General Allotment Act of Feb. 8, 1887, as amended, 25 U.S.C. § 334 (1982) nor the Indian allotment regulations at 43 CFR Part 2530, specifically provide for the cancellation of a certificate of allotment, the Secretary of the Interior, as custodian of the public lands, may cancel such a certificate where he finds that the allottee has not complied with the requirements for issuance of a patent.

Where BLM has classified certain lands for disposal under sec. 4 of the General Allotment Act of Feb. 8, 1887, 25 U.S.C. § 334 (1982), and issued a certificate of allotment, it may establish a reasonable time in which the allottee must demonstrate settlement of the land in question. Two years from issuance of the certificate is such a reasonable time.

Where lands are classified for disposal under sec. 4 of the General Allotment Act of Feb. 8, 1887, 25 U.S.C. § 334 (1982), as irrigable lands and a certificate of allotment issued, settlement of those lands must include acts to establish the allottee's good faith and intention to, in fact, irrigate and cultivate crops on the land in question.

ACT OF MARCH 3, 1891

BLM may properly cancel a right-of-way granted pursuant to the Act of Mar. 3, 1891, 43 U.S.C. § 946 (1970), for violation of the terms of the grant where the grantee has failed to file proof of construction, has failed to maintain a fence around the pump site (including the planting of vines thereon to screen the fence), and has failed to maintain a performance bond pending acceptance of proof of construction. Such

James L. Morrison Sr. et al., 87 IBLA 236 (June 19, 1985)

Under the Confirmation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1165 (1982), 2 years from the date of issuance of a "receipt upon the final entry" an entryman acquires a right to a patent if there is "no pending contest or protest." The statute's wording does not provide for any exception and the Department cannot defeat a right by creating an exception to its application.

Supreme Court decisions that the statute of limitations for initiating suits to vacate and annul patents, 43 U.S.C. § 1166 (1982), does not preclude suits by the United States to annul patents issued in alleged violation of rights of its Indian wards do not apply to permit contest proceedings if the Department is precluded from bringing a contest by the Confirmation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1165 (1982). The Confirmation Act transfers to the courts authority over controversies arising after the 2-year period has passed and gives the patentee the protection of a judicial forum.

A protest of the acceptance of a notice of location of a homestead which was rejected on appeal could not constitute a protest against approval of an application to purchase filed 3 years later. Until the application to purchase was filed, there could be no final entry to which the Confirmation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1165 (1982), could apply and, correspondingly, the protest could not be a "protest against the validity of such entry" so as to preclude application of the Act.

A field investigation report prepared by BLM is not a protest.

The Confirmation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1165 (1982), does not apply when the applicant has not tendered payment for the land and a receipt has not been issued.

A decision approving a bond filed by a mineral claimant of reserved minerals on land patented under the Stock-Raising Homestead Act will be affirmed when the owner of the surface estate failed to file objections to issuance of the bond pursuant to 43 CFR 3814.1(d), notwithstanding the fact that the surface owner has filed a civil complaint against the mineral claimant and intends to initiate a private contest against the mineral claimant.

Visintainer Sheep Co., 97 IBLA 63 (Apr. 27, 1987)

Adjudication of a mineral claimant's bond pursuant to 43 U.S.C. § 299 (1982), does not require a formal hearing on the record in conformity to provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 557 (1982). The landowner's rights to notice and an opportunity to be heard concerning the adequacy of the bond furnished to protect his rights as a property owner are safeguarded by the right of appeal to this Board.

A mineral claimant's bond given to enable mining on land patented under the Stock-Raising Homestead Act must be executed by all mineral claimants seeking to re-enter the patented lands.

A mineral claimant's bond must identify the claims sought to be entered by a mineral claimant seeking to re-enter SHRA lands, so as to permit BLM to determine possible damages to crops, surface improvements, and the grazing value of the land within those claims.

John Yule, 96 IBLA 379 (Apr. 14, 1987)

Where public lands have been withdrawn from location of mining claims under a first-form reclamation withdrawal, no mining claim may be located thereon until there has been a formal revocation of the withdrawal or restoration of the land to mineral entry. A mining claim located on such lands prior to restoration is properly declared null and void ab initio regardless of the locator's agreement to abide by the conditions imposed by the Bureau of Reclamation as a condition of restoration.

Paul J. DesFosses, Hardes Mining Co., 102 IBLA 169 (May 3, 1988)

In almost every case an application to restore lands within a reclamation withdrawal to mineral entry pursuant to the Act of Apr. 23, 1932, 43 U.S.C. § 154 (1982), will be rejected by the Bureau of Land Management when the Bureau of Reclamation recommends against restoration. If the record on appeal contains cogent reasons for the Bureau of Reclamation rejection and states a logical basis for a finding that, for the lands in question, the interests of the United States could not be protected by the imposition of limitations provided by the Act and other laws applicable to mining operations, the determination will be affirmed by this Board.

The Act of Apr. 23, 1932, 43 U.S.C. § 154 (1982), gives the Secretary of the Interior authority to open lands subject to a reclamation withdrawal to mineral entry if the lands are known or believed to be valuable minerals sufficient to support a "discovery" prior to opening the lands. All that need be determined is whether it may reasonably be believed that the lands contain valuable minerals.

When the Bureau of Land Management has conducted a mineral examination to determine whether the lands are known or believed to be valuable for minerals and, based upon that examination, has concluded that the lands are not known or believed to be valuable for minerals, an appellant must prove by a preponderance

ACT OF AUGUST 11, 1955

It is error to prohibit placer mining on powersite lands pursuant to the Act of Aug. 11, 1955, merely on the basis that unrestricted and unmitigated mining operations will adversely affect other land uses or values, because (1) there no longer can be unrestricted or unmitigated placer mining on such claims, and (2) all land has some other use or value which would be affected by mining, so that prohibition for that reason would foreclose mining on all powersite lands and effectively nullify the Act. Whether to allow or prohibit mining requires an evaluation of potential detriments and benefits in each specific case, bearing in mind that Congress generally intended that powersite lands would be open to placer location and operation.

United States Forest Service v. Walter D. Milender, 86 IBLA 181 (Apr. 30, 1985) 92 I.D. 175

Under the Mining Claims Rights Restoration Act of 1955, 30 U.S.C. § 621 (1982), a "general permission" to engage in placer operations is always a possibility. Such a "general permission," however, means all operations are to be carried out under existing laws regulating mining.

The Mining Claims Rights Restoration Act of 1955, 30 U.S.C. § 621 (1982), opened powersites to entry under the mining laws. To determine whether placer mining should be allowed pursuant to the Act, there must be a determination made whether there is a substantial use of the land for other purposes which warrants a prohibition of mining.

Under the Mining Claims Rights Restoration Act of 1955, 30 U.S.C. § 621 (1982), the Secretary of the Interior may, but is not required to, hold a hearing to determine whether placer mining operations should be prohibited, generally permitted, or permitted subject to a requirement that the land be restored to its condition prior to mining. In making this determination, the only limitation placed upon the Secretary's discretion is the requirement that his order must be "appropriate."

To determine whether mining would "substantially interfere" with other uses of powersite lands within the meaning of the Mining Claims Rights Restoration Act of 1955, 30 U.S.C. § 621 (1982), the Department is required to engage in a weighing or balancing of the benefits of mining against the injury mining would cause to other uses of the land. Mining may be allowed where the benefits of mining outweigh the benefits to other uses.

Under the Mining Claims Rights Restoration Act of 1955, 30 U.S.C. § 621 (1982), the Department possesses authority to condition mining plan approval upon reclamation of the mined land to the same condition as it was found prior to mining.

Departmental regulation 43 CFR 3738.1 provides that, in cases where there has been a hearing before an Administrative Law Judge which has resulted in an order that placer mining shall be allowed in a powersite withdrawal provided that the miner shall restore the land to the condition in which it was immediately prior to mining, there shall be a bond to insure reclamation.

therein. The Department is bound to follow those provisions.

The legislative history of the Act of July 6, 1960, clearly shows that Congress concluded that the Federal Government holds title to land relinquished to the Federal Government in anticipation of a forest lieu exchange, notwithstanding the failure to consummate the exchange.

Neither 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982) nor the regulations at 43 CFR 3833 require a mineral locator to submit proof of chain of title to BLM. The regulation at 43 CFR 3833.4 provides that failure to file information after notice from BLM as to a deficiency may lead to a determination that a claim is void, but application of the rule is explicitly limited to the information requirements of the regulatory provisions listed in the subsection. The regulatory procedure for dealing with curable defects applies only when information sought by BLM is required by regulation. It does not apply to other information BLM might believe would be useful to its administration of mining claim records so as to permit invalidation of a claim for reasons not enumerated by statute or regulation.

James C. Mackey, 96 IBLA 356 (Apr. 10, 1987) 94 I.D. 132

BLM has the authority to determine whether a relinquishment of a Native allotment application was voluntary and knowing and not fraudulently procured in making a preliminary determination whether to recommend a suit to cancel a patent, which was issued to the State of Alaska after the relinquishment with respect to land originally covered by the allotment application. Where the applicant requests an oral hearing to present evidence on the validity of a relinquishment, the Board will order a hearing pursuant to 43 CFR 4.415, in which the State will be allowed to intervene.

The Office of Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement has "jurisdiction" over all surface coal mining and reclamation operations when inspecting for the purposes stated in 30 U.S.C. § 1267(a) (1982). In regard to inspections, the only issue as to "subject matter jurisdiction" would be a claim that the site inspected is outside the scope of the Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act of 1977 because it is not a surface coal mining or reclamation operation, is not engaged in any activity connected with a surface coal mine, or does not otherwise come under the provisions of the Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act of 1977.

When lands are withdrawn from entry under some or all of the public land laws, the withdrawal remains in effect until there is a formal revocation or modification of the withdrawal. In this case, the transfer of administrative jurisdiction of previously withdrawn lands from the Department of the Interior to the Department of Agriculture pursuant to the authority granted by 16 U.S.C. § 4601-18(c) (1982), cannot be construed as a formal revocation or modification of the withdrawal opening the lands to mineral entry. The Department of the Interior retained jurisdiction to the extent necessary for the operation of the reclamation project and other reclamation purposes.

The Secretary has the authority to issue corrective patents when necessary to eliminate errors. A party seeking a corrective patent initiates the proceeding by filing an application asserting ownership of lands described in and based upon a patent or other document containing an alleged error. However, when the error does not lie in the patent or other document under which the applicant is asserting ownership, but lies in a patent issued to another party, the Secretary does not have authority to correct the other party's patent.

Genaro M. Roybal, 107 IBLA 75 (Jan. 30, 1989)

Where a decision of the Director, Minerals Management Service, is approved by an Assistant Secretary, the decision is final for the Department and the Board of Land Appeals lacks jurisdiction to review either the substance thereof or the procedures followed in issuing the decision.

Marathon Oil Co., 108 IBLA 177 (Apr. 12, 1989)

An Alaska Native allotment which has not automatically vested pursuant to ANILCA is properly adjudicated under the Act of May 17, 1906. The question of the validity of the application is separate and apart from the issue of the ownership of the lands named in the application, and the Department has the jurisdiction to address this question, even though the lands described in the application, may have been congressionally conveyed to another party. The Department had an ongoing trust obligation to Alaska Natives, and therefore retains jurisdiction to determine the validity of the Native allotment application. This action is necessary in order to determine whether it is necessary for the Department to take action to recover the land for the benefit of the Native applicant.

The Board has no jurisdiction to adjudicate the propriety of a survey conducted by or on behalf of the Forest Service or of decisions by the Forest Service accepting such survey. However, such surveys do not constitute official surveys of the public lands of the United States, as the authority to conduct such surveys and resurveys is vested solely in the Secretary of the Interior, who in turn has delegated this authority to BLM. Thus, a Forest Service survey does not effect any change in the location of a corner, but is merely an administrative survey which the Forest Service uses in managing the National Forests.

A decision by BLM denying a request to amend an existing resource management plan or a management framework plan is not subject to appeal to the Board of Land Appeals. Although this situation is not expressly covered by the terms of 43 CFR 1610.5-2(a) (which allows administrative review of approval or amendment of resource management plans only via protests to the Director of BLM, whose decision is final for the Department), logic dictates denial of a request for an amendment of such a plan must follow the same avenue of review. It is distinguishable from actions on applications following classification or decisions implementing a management plan or amendment, which are appealable to this Board.

A decision denying a stay pending resolution of a timely filed appeal may be reversed in the absence of a reasoned finding that the stay would be detrimental to the lessor where the appeal raises a bona fide legal issue, lessee is faced with the threat of irreparable injury if the stay is not granted, it appears the threatened injury to the lessee outweighs any potential harm the stay may cause the lessor, and

A document sent certified mail by BLM to a person at his last address of record is considered to have been constructively served on that person at the time of return by the Postal Service of the undelivered certified letter, and such constructive service is equivalent in legal effect to actual service of the document. An oil and gas lessee's last address of record is that stated on the lease application form, unless the lessee has filed written notice of a change of address with the issuing BLM office. Thus, the time for filing a petition for reinstatement of a terminated oil and gas lease begins on the date the notice of termination was returned to BLM as undeliverable after it was sent to the lessee's last address of record, and expires 60 days later.

Where the district court orders an oil and gas lessee to make additional royalty payments and the lessee complies but appeals from the district court decision, a decision by the Minerals Management Service to distribute the additional and disputed funds to the State of Alaska will be reversed on appeal to the Board of Land Appeals in accordance with 30 U.S.C. § 191 (Supp. III 1985) and 30 CFR 219.100.

Where BLM issues a notice holding mining claims for rejection (that is, where BLM provides the claimant 30 days in which to supply certain information, failing in which his mining claims will be finally declared abandoned and void without further notice), the 30-day period during which an appeal may be initiated with the Board of Land Appeals does not commence until the expiration of the 30-day compliance period allowed by the notice. During the 30-day compliance period, BLM's decision is interlocutory, so that a notice of appeal filed during the compliance period is premature. BLM should treat a notice of appeal filed during the compliance period as a protest and then issue an appealable decision.

However, where a notice of appeal is filed prematurely from an interlocutory decision and the matter is forwarded to the Board of Land Appeals, the Board has discretion whether to remand the case to BLM to be treated as a protest or, instead, to adjudicate the merits of the matter. The Board will reach the merits where there is no practical benefit in remanding the case, such as where the appellant's statement of reasons to the Board makes it clear that he has no information to supply to BLM that will establish that his claims should not be declared void.

Although Departmental regulation 43 CFR 4.21(a) provides that the timely filing of a notice of appeal will suspend the effect of the decision under appeal, this provision does not require the agency to take positive action for the benefit of an appellant. Thus, the pendency of such an appeal does not preclude BLM from issuing a notice that the lease will expire if the lessee fails to place a well on producing status within 60 days, because the notice will be mooted if the appeal is successful.

Prima Exploration, Inc., 96 IBLA 80 (Mar. 2, 1987)

Unlike the failure to file a timely notice of appeal, failure to file or serve a timely statement of reasons or answer does not deprive the Board of Land Appeals of jurisdiction over an appeal. Under 43 CFR 4.402, failure to file and serve a statement of reasons within the time required only makes an appeal "subject to summary dismissal." The Board avoids procedural dismissals if there has been no showing that a procedural deficiency has prejudiced an adverse party.

It does not matter whether a document filed with the Bureau of Land Management characterizes itself as a request for reconsideration or an appeal. Even though an individual may not characterize the document as an appeal, if the submission challenges the findings of fact or conclusions made by an adverse decision, it must be treated as a notice of appeal.

When a notice of appeal is timely filed, the Bureau of Land Management loses jurisdiction over the case and has no further authority to take any action on the subject matter of the appeal. The relevant case files should then be transmitted to the Board of Land Appeals immediately.

The Board of Land Appeals has jurisdiction to review a decision by BLM not to prepare a supplemental environmental impact statement pursuant to 40 CFR 1502.9(c)(1)(ii).

Challenges to the approval or amendment of a resource management plan and its related environmental impact statement are accorded administrative review only in conformity with the protest procedures prescribed by 43 CFR Part 1600.

As an appellate tribunal, the Board of Land Appeals does not exercise supervisory authority over BLM except in the context of an actual case in controversy over which the Board has jurisdiction. The Board will not consider challenges to policy statements issued by BLM, or give opinions on abstract propositions.

Headwaters, Inc., et al., 101 IBLA 234 (Feb. 29, 1988)

If an appellant's notice of appeal did not include a statement of reasons for the appeal, under 43 CFR 4.412(a), the appellant must file such a statement with the Board of Land Appeals within 30 days after the notice of appeal was filed. However, under 43 CFR 4.22(f), the Board may extend the time for filing a statement of reasons. Under 43 CFR 4.402(a), failure to file the statement of reasons within the time allowed (either by 43 CFR 4.412(a), or by the Board in an order granting an extension) subjects the appeal to summary dismissal. Where no statement of reasons is ever filed and no reason is offered for the failure to file, the appeal is properly dismissed.

Under the principle of stare decisis, prior Departmental decisions are binding precedent, but may be overruled when found to be erroneous. However, as a matter of administrative authority, so long as title to land affected by a decision remains within the Department, an erroneous decision may be corrected.

It is premature for the Bureau of Land Management to reject petition/applications for desert land entries merely on the basis of informal information and belief that the State water authority will probably deny the applicants the right to appropriate groundwater for irrigation of the entries where the water authority has taken no official action on the water applications pending before it.

The final ruling of a Government contest of unpatented mining claims which are the subject of amended locations where the claims were declared null and void for lack of discovery of a valuable mineral deposit, which declaration was sustained on appeal, will not be applied to amended locations where the record shows that these amended locations were specifically excluded from the contest action.

An appeal of a decision by an Administrative Law Judge which approves a settlement agreement between the party that filed an application for review of issuance of a mine permit pursuant to sec. 514(c) of the Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act of 1977, 30 U.S.C. § 1264(c) (1982), and OSM, which issued the permit, in the absence of consent by the permittee, will be affirmed where the agreement, which includes withdrawal of the application for review, does not adversely affect any of the permittee's interests and the permittee is, therefore, no longer an interested party in the proceedings.

Peabody Coal Co. (Appellant) v. The Hopi Tribe & Office of Surface Mining Reclamation & Enforcement (Appellees), 91 IBLA 59 (Feb. 28, 1986)

Where an application to acquire Federal land is rejected by BLM because applicant's declaration of material facts in the application demonstrates conclusively that he is not entitled to the land as a matter of law, a subsequent effort on appeal to revise, amend, or deny the facts will not be considered, absent a persuasive explanation of error in the application.

If, when all of the allegations of material fact made by an applicant for a Native allotment are accepted as true, allowance of the application is barred as a matter of law, and the rule of Pence v. Kleppe, 529 F.2d 135 (9th Cir. 1976), is not applicable. The application is properly rejected without a hearing.

Conoco Inc., et al., 96 IBLA 384 (Apr. 14, 1987)

When reviewing a failure to abate cessation order, the Administrative Law Judge has no authority to consider questions regarding the jurisdictional authority of OSMRE to issue the underlying notice of violation if the permittee failed to timely seek review of the notice of violation.

P&K Coal Co., Ltd. v. Office of Surface Mining Reclamation & Enforcement, 98 IBLA 26 (June 2, 1987)

When a party to an adversary proceeding within the Department and a Departmental agency acting through its attorneys in the Office of the Solicitor reach and sign a compromise agreement concerning that proceeding and an Administrative Law Judge issues a consent decision approving that agreement, the parties are bound to the terms of the agreement as a matter of contract.

When a party reaches an agreement with the Office of Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement and withdraws its application for review of a notice of violation, the decision of an Administrative Law Judge dismissing the application is final unless appealed. As a consequence of the dismissal, there is no longer an application for review pending in the Office of Hearings and Appeals, and issues as to the contents of the NOV may no longer be raised, absent a showing of compelling equitable or legal reasons why the dismissal should be set aside.

Where an Administrative Law Judge decides after a hearing that a Native allotment applicant is not entitled to the lands applied for, the Board will not approve a settlement agreement under which a portion of those lands would be conveyed to the applicant without a de novo review of the record to determine whether the Administrative Law Judge's decision is correct.

ADMINISTRATIVE LAW JUDGES

In an appeal arising from a decision by an Administrative Law Judge, the Board of Land Appeals may make findings of fact and conclusions based upon the record on appeal. The entire record before the Board may be considered in determining whether the decision appealed from is in error, and an appropriate order entered.

Bureau of Land Management v. David & Bonnie Ericsson, 88 IBLA 248 (Sept. 4, 1985)

Where the Administrative Law Judge who hears the case becomes unavailable to the agency, and the testimony involves neither conflicting facts nor credibility of the witnesses, writing of the decision by a different Administrative Law Judge is not error.

Paul Asper v. U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service, 6 OHA 86 (Nov. 8, 1985)

Where, in a decision, an Administrative Law Judge rules on the liability for a civil penalty even though liability was never an issue and the full amount of the civil penalty was prepaid prior to the hearing, any question of liability for the civil penalty was moot, and the Board will vacate the ruling.

Bernos Coal Co. & Excello Land & Mineral Corp. v. Office of Surface Mining Reclamation & Enforcement, 97 IBLA 285 (May 18, 1987)

It is improper to impose a time limit on raising the question of a lack of jurisdiction of OHA, and any pending administrative review proceeding must be dismissed (either by an Administrative Law Judge or the Board of Land Appeals) upon discovery that OHA lacks jurisdiction. The obligation to dismiss the proceeding applies whether or not the lack of jurisdiction was affirmatively raised by a party, and a party's failure to assert lack of jurisdiction at the beginning of administrative review will not result in a waiver of its right to do so at a later time or diminish the obligation of the administrative forum to dismiss the proceeding.

Where an application for review is not filed within 30 days of receipt of a notice of violation or cessation order (as expressly required by 43 CFR 4.1162(a)), OHA is deprived of jurisdiction to consider the application. It is error for an Administrative Law Judge not to dismiss an application for review filed with the Hearings Division after the time prescribed for such applications.

McPeck Mining & Mark E. McPeck v. Office of Surface Mining Reclamation & Enforcement, 101 IBLA 389 (Mar. 31, 1988)

A decision by an Administrative Law Judge who did not preside over a hearing in a mining claim contest will not be overturned for that reason where an evaluation of the credibility of witnesses was not a material factor in reaching the decision.

United States v. Jean M. McMullin, David S. McMullin, 102 IBLA 276 (May 24, 1988)

In order to sustain a charge that an Administrative Law Judge should be disqualified or his decision set aside because of bias or misconduct, a substantial showing of such bias or misconduct must be made. An assumption that he might be predisposed in favor of the Government is not sufficient.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE--ContinuedADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE ACT

In a grazing trespass case initiated by BLM upon an order to show cause, the burden of proof is properly placed upon BLM as the proponent of the order sought to establish by substantial evidence the occurrence of cattle trespass.

Where on appeal BLM challenges findings made by an Administrative Law Judge on grounds that his findings concerning credibility of witnesses are inadequate to justify the decision as announced, the Board of Land Appeals will examine the record to determine whether, on the basis of all evidence, the findings made by the fact-finder are supported by credible testimony.

Conoco Inc., et al., 96 IBLA 384 (Apr. 14, 1987)

An assessment of late payment charges by MMS cannot be affirmed if the administrative record submitted to the Board of Land Appeals by the Director, MMS, does not contain documents conclusively showing that the lessee failed to pay royalty timely. In the absence of the original payment vouchers duly date stamped to show when they were received (or other suitable proof), it cannot be found through the presumption of regularity that they were not timely filed.

When a notice of appeal to the Board of Land Appeals is filed from a decision of the Director, MMS, MMS is required to submit the complete, original casefile, containing all documents relating to the dispute at hand. Failure to include documents establishing relevant facts may prevent the Board from affirming the decision on appeal.

Where the record shows that a mining claimant utilized the U.S. Postal Service to deliver his affidavit of assessment work and that it was received by the proper BLM office on Jan. 6, 1986, but the record does not contain the envelope in which the affidavit was sent, the mining claimant will not be required to bear the consequences of BLM's failure to retain the envelope, and a decision declaring the claim abandoned and void will be reversed.

In granting a right-of-way for a storage reservoir for secondary-treated wastewater and a water diversion pipeline, BLM may rely on environmental documentation prepared by other agencies to make a convincing case that no significant environmental impact will result, where BLM conducts an independent review of the assessments by the agencies of the environmental impact of the project, and the assessments identify relevant areas of environmental concern, including the threat of groundwater contamination and inundation of cultural resources. However, where BLM fails to incorporate into the grant those measures deemed necessary to mitigate any significant environmental impact, the Board will, rather than set aside the grant, remand the case to BLM for inclusion of appropriate stipulations.

Colorado Environmental Coalition et al., 108 IBLA 10 (Mar. 20, 1989)

The Board of Land Appeals does not have jurisdiction to review appeals of decisions to approve or amend a resource management plan. Because a resource management plan establishes management policy, its approval is subject only to protest to the Director of the Bureau of Land Management, whose decision is final for the Department. Nor does the Board possess authority to review land classification determinations made by BLM. However, actions on applications following classification of land and decisions which implement a management plan or amendment are appealable to the Board.

The Desert Tortoise Habitat Management Plan is a document designed to guide and control future management actions and does not take specific action or implement a decision or action. The "management actions" it identifies are not the type of specific actions or land-use decisions which are appealable to the Board.

California Ass'n of Four Wheel Drive Clubs, Inc., 108 IBLA 140 (Apr. 3, 1989)

Where a decision of the Director, Minerals Management Service, is approved by an Assistant Secretary, the decision is final for the Department and the Board of Land Appeals lacks jurisdiction to review either the substance thereof or the procedures followed in issuing the decision.

The Board of Land Appeals does not have jurisdiction to review appeals of decisions to approve or amend a resource management plan or land classification determinations rendered by BLM. Because a resource management plan establishes management policy, its approval is subject only to protest to the Director, BLM, whose decision is final for the Department. On the other hand, actions on applications following classification of land and decisions which implement a resource management plan or amendment are appealable to the Board.

The Wilderness Society, 109 IBLA 175 (June 9, 1989)

A group that has not participated in agency decisionmaking prior to approval by BLM of a mining plan of operations is not a "party to a case" within the meaning of 43 CFR 4.410(a) for purposes of appeal.

A group is not entitled to personal notice of all planned actions affecting public lands in Nevada simply because it has asserted a general interest in natural resource development in the State.

Except in areas under wilderness review, mining plans of operations become effective immediately upon the approval pursuant to provision of 43 CFR 3809.4(b). This regulatory provision makes approval of a mining plan of operations a final Departmental action immediately subject to judicial review.

To obtain standing for review by the Board of Land Appeals a party must have participated in Bureau of Land Management decisionmaking prior to issuance of the decision sought to be reviewed. Even though a group may be adversely affected by decisionmaking, it lacks standing to appeal if it is not a party to the case.

When the Board conducts de novo review of a decision of an Administrative Law Judge who erroneously allocated the burden of proof in a private contest proceeding to the applicant for a Native allotment rather than to the contestant, the Board properly reviews the entire record to determine whether the applicant established by a preponderance of the evidence that he satisfactorily proved he was entitled to an allotment.

Ira Wassillie (On Reconsideration), 111 IBLA 53 (Sept. 20, 1989)

A party is not required to appeal from a BLM letter which does not adversely affect it, is informative in nature, and does not set forth appeal rights.

Chevron U.S.A. Inc., 111 IBLA 96 (Sept. 28, 1989)

An appeal from a decision approving an application for a recreational permit for a motor vehicle trip through Arch Canyon, Utah, could not be dismissed as moot even though the challenged event had occurred, where issues raised by the appeal were capable of repetition, and where failure to decide the appeal would cause substantial issues to evade review.

BURDEN OF PROOF

Where the reasonable rental value of Government-furnished quarters has been determined in accordance with accepted appraisal procedures pursuant to Departmental directives, and the occupant alleges that his rent is excessive, the burden is on the occupant to prove by positive, specific, and substantial evidence that the appraisal is in error.

Where a party appeals the BLM issuance of special recreation use permits, it is the obligation of appellant to show that the determinations to issue the permits are erroneous. Unless a statement of reasons shows adequate basis for appeal and the allegations are supported with evidence showing error, the appeals cannot be afforded favorable consideration.

Mendocino County Tax-Payers Land Use Committee, 86 IBLA 319 (May 16, 1985)

The burden of establishing a valid color-of-title claim is on the claimant.

William T. Bertagnole, 87 IBLA 34 (May 23, 1985)

There is a presumption of regularity which supports the official acts of public officers in the proper discharge of their duties. When an appellant asserts the affidavit of annual assessment work was mailed to BLM, but lost, appellant must submit evidence that it was received by BLM in order to overcome this presumption.

Carmelita M. Holland, 87 IBLA 175 (June 13, 1985)

In a grazing trespass case initiated by BLM upon an order to show cause, the burden of proof is properly placed upon BLM as the proponent of the order sought to establish by substantial evidence the occurrence of cattle trespass.

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to consider and determine the extent of the public lands. This authority includes the authority to survey parcels conveyed from Federal ownership which border public lands. Melissa M. Peall v. Acting Area Director, Portland Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 16 IBIA 163 (June 21, 1988)

The burden is on the lessee/operator to establish that the plugging and abandonment of an oil and gas well has been conducted in accordance with a written plan approved by the authorized officer as required by regulation at 43 CFR 3162.3-4(a). Where the record on appeal from a decision requiring an operator to replug a well discloses a material issue of fact regarding whether the well was properly plugged, the case is properly referred for an evidentiary hearing pursuant to 43 CFR 4.415.

Coleman Oil & Gas, Inc., 104 IBLA 363 (Sept. 27, 1988)

There is an established legal presumption, which may be rebutted, that official acts of public officers discharging their official duties are regular. That presumption can be rebutted by substantial evidence tending to show that BLM's action was not regular in a particular instance. If such a showing is made, the Board decides the case without further reference to the presumption, and the appellant must prove his case by a presumption of the evidence.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE--ContinuedBURDEN OF PROOF--Continued

Where there is the usual presumption that surveys of the United States are correct and in compliance with statutory requirements there then exists a burden upon the claimant arguing survey error to establish, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the survey was fraudulent, or grossly erroneous. If a preponderance of the evidence indicates, in fact, that a fraudulent survey did not take place, the Secretary has no grounds upon which to issue a new survey.

Pueblo of Sandia Boundary, M-36963 (Dec. 9, 1988)
96 I.D. 331

There is a legal presumption that administrative officials have properly discharged their duties and not lost or misplaced legally significant documents properly filed with them. Nahama & Weagant Energy Co., 108 IBLA 209 (Apr. 19, 1989)

In order to sustain a charge that an Administrative Law Judge should be disqualified or his decision set aside because of bias or misconduct, a substantial showing of such bias or misconduct must be made. An assumption that he might be predisposed in favor of the Government is not sufficient.

When the Government contests mining claims on a charge of lack of discovery of a valuable mineral deposit, it has the burden of going forward with sufficient evidence to establish a prima facie case as to that charge; however, the mining claimant has the ultimate burden of refuting the Government's case by a preponderance of the evidence.

United States v. Jean M. McMullin, David S. McMullin, 102 IBLA 276 (May 24, 1988)

In determining whether a change in law or in the interpretation of law should be given retroactive effect, the Board of Indian Appeals will consider: (1) the nature of the reliance placed upon the prior applications of law by the parties; (2) the harm or prejudice to those who relied upon previous principles of law; (3) the purpose of the law in light of public policy; and (4) the harm to the administration of justice or public purpose.

Ernestine M. Smith et al v. Area Director, Muskogee Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 16 IBLA 153 (June 21, 1988)

"Adverse party." An "adverse party" to a case is one who will be disadvantaged if the agency decision is appealed and if the appellant prevails. A party who is determined by BLM to have priority for two oil and gas leases over another party will be disadvantaged if the latter prevails on an appeal to the Board of Land Appeals and should be named as an "adverse party" in the decision rejecting the latter's offer.

A hearing is not necessary in the absence of a material issue of fact, which, if proven, would alter the disposition of the matter. A hearing is not necessary where the dispute does not involve facts, but involves the proper application and interpretation of those facts, and the Bureau of Land Management properly reviewed the same information submitted to this Board.

Woods Petroleum Co., 86 IBLA 46 (Apr. 10, 1985)

Mining claims located on lands closed to mineral entry are null and void from their inception as a matter of law, and no property rights are created thereby. Where lands described in a previously relinquished Native allotment application are patented to another, and the applicant requests reinstatement of the relinquished application, the Department has a duty to a Native allotment applicant to make a preliminary investigation and determination regarding whether the relinquishment was voluntary and knowing. If it was not, the application should be reinstated and, if deemed appropriate, the Department should pursue recovery of such lands. When a document stating an intent to relinquish a Native allotment application is suspect on its face, a petition for reinstatement of the application should not be denied until the authenticity of the relinquishment document is verified.

An interpretative rule, which is not subject to the notice and comment procedures of 25 U.S.C. § 553, is one which merely explains and sets forth with greater specificity the agency's understanding or interpretation of that which a statute already requires.

83 IAM 7.2(E), requiring the submission of attorney vouchers to the Department of the Interior for approval before they can be paid, is merely a restatement of what is already specifically required by 25 U.S.C. § 82.

To the extent that the fixing of fees for attorney contracts was contemplated under both 25 U.S.C. §§ 81 and 476, sec. 476 does not supersede sec. 81. Application of those requirements of sec. 81 relating to the fixing of fees to attorney contracts entered into under sec. 476 is a reasonable interpretation of the Secretary's responsibilities with respect to the "fixing of fees." The application of such requirements constitutes, at most, an interpretative rule that need not be published in the Federal Register.

Where state selection applications were rejected by decisions approving conflicting Native allotment applications, the State of Alaska has standing to appeal those decisions to the Board of Land Appeals.

State of Alaska, 85 IBLA 196 (Feb. 27, 1985)

The owner of improvements located on land described in a Native allotment application has standing to protest the allotment application under sec. 905 of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1634 (1982). Standing to appeal favorable adjudication of the allotment application and rejection of the protest to the Board of Land Appeals requires a showing of a legally cognizable interest adversely affected by denial of the protest. The interest of a trespasser on the land without claim or color of right will not afford such standing.

Eugene M. Witt, 107 IBLA 229 (Feb. 21, 1989)

An appeal from a decision of the Bureau of Land Management will be dismissed for appellant's failure to show that she has been adversely affected where BLM's decision held that appellant's certificate of allotment be issued subject to the continued right of public access across allotment lands if survey verifies that a trail crosses the allotment.

Gladys Boquist, 90 IBLA 168 (Jan. 8, 1986)

The intent of the regulations limiting standing to appeal to a party to the case is to afford a rational framework for administrative decisionmaking on the assumption that the initial decisionmaker will have had the benefit of the input of such a party in reaching its decision. Where a party has actively participated in the consideration of an inventory unit for eligibility as a wilderness study area has requested in writing the opportunity to comment on applications for permit to drill (APD's) filed for lands within the unit, and has been recognized by the Bureau of Land Management as

The jurisdiction of the Board of Land Appeals extends to appeals from decisions of Departmental officials regarding the disposition of minerals on public domain and acquired lands pursuant to statutory authority and the regulations promulgated thereunder. As a general rule, this Board has no authority to entertain a claim under the common law of contracts for damages for contract breach and an appeal to this Board predicated on such a ground is properly dismissed for lack of jurisdiction.

One who is a mere trespasser upon land without claim or color of right does not possess the legally cognizable interest necessary for standing to appeal from a decision granting a conflicting Native allotment application.

James M. Wright, Butch L. Loper, 95 IBLA 387 (Feb. 24, 1987)

Under 43 CFR 4.410(a), there are two separate and distinct prerequisites to prosecution of an appeal to the Board of Land Appeals: (1) the appellant must be a "party to the case," and (2) the appellant must be "adversely affected" by the decision below.

The assumption "that no adverse claim exists" required by 30 U.S.C. § 29 (1982), does not extend to preclude a mining claim for which no adverse claim was filed during publication of notice of patent proceedings from serving as a foundation for finding standing to appeal.

ALASKA NATIVE CLAIMS SETTLEMENT ACT

Sec. 14(h)(1) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1613(h)(1) (1982), authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to withdraw and convey existing historical places and cemetery sites to the appropriate regional corporation. A historical site application is properly rejected where the subject land was withdrawn by Public Land Order No. 5180, pursuant to 43 U.S.C. § 1616(d)(1) (1982), or withdrawn by Public Land Order No. 5250, pursuant to 43 U.S.C. § 1616(d)(2) (1982).

Under the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, the key prerequisite to a village corporation's selection of land was the land's availability for withdrawal under sec. 11(a), 43 U.S.C. § 1610(a) (1982). If not so withdrawn, it could not be selected by a village corporation under sec. 12(a), 43 U.S.C. § 1611(a) (1982).

The provision "withdrawn or reserved for national defense purposes" in sec. 11(a) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1610(a) (1982), includes not only lands formally withdrawn but also embraces those lands which have been effectively reserved for such use.

The language "for national defense purposes" in sec. 11(a) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1610(a) (1982), does not create a special category of lands within those under control of the Department of Defense, but rather serves to distinguish lands held by the military from those held by other Federal agencies.

With the exception of the rights specifically granted or retained by that Act, sec. 4 of ANCSA, 43 U.S.C. § 1603 (1982), extinguished all forms of aboriginal title however characterized or described. Its three subsections apply to abolish aboriginal title regardless of whether such title is described in terms of right, title, possession, use, or occupancy.

The phrase "statute or treaty" in subsec. 4(c) of ANCSA, 43 U.S.C. § 1603(c) (1982), applies to all statutes "relating to Native use and occupancy." However, sec. 4 does not extend to extinguish vested rights acquired under statute prior to ANCSA's enactment. Rights acquired by virtue of compliance with statutory provisions are not claims based on aboriginal use and occupancy but property rights created by Congress.

Subsec. 4(c) of ANCSA, 43 U.S.C. § 1603(c) (1982), bars the assertion of any claim based on prior Native use and occupancy of lands in Alaska. An assertion that a homesite location is invalid by reason of Native use and occupancy of the land requires a showing of use and occupancy at some time in the past, including the time the homesite was located, and thus is barred.

COAL LEASES AND PERMITS

Where BLM has approved the assignment of a record title interest in an Alaskan coal lease at a time when the lease account is not in good standing, the assignment is not void but voidable at the discretion of BLM. If the assignment has not been voided by BLM, it remains in effect and binds the assignees.

The assignee of the record title interest in an Alaskan coal lease effectively agrees to assume the obligations of the lessee upon acceptance, with BLM's approval of an assignment of such interest and, thus, becomes obligated to pay any unpaid rental and royalty

Under the Confirmation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1165 (1982), 2 years from the date of issuance of a "receipt upon the final entry" an entryman acquires a right to a patent if there is "no pending contest or protest." The statute's wording does not provide for any exception and the Department cannot defeat a right by creating an exception to its application.

Supreme Court decisions that the statute of limitations for initiating suits to vacate and annul patents, 43 U.S.C. § 1166 (1982), does not preclude suits by the United States to annul patents issued in alleged violation of rights of its Indian wards do not apply to permit contest proceedings if the Department is precluded from bringing a contest by the Confirmation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1165 (1982). The Confirmation Act transfers to the courts authority over controversies arising after the 2-year period has passed and gives the patentee the protection of a judicial forum.

A protest of the acceptance of a notice of location of a homesite which was rejected on appeal could not constitute a protest against approval of an application to purchase filed 3 years later. Until the application to purchase was filed, there could be no final entry to which the Confirmation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1165 (1982), could apply and, correspondingly, the protest could not be a "protest against the validity of such entry" so as to preclude application of the Act.

Neither actual nor constructive notice of a Departmental decision is accomplished by an attempted service using certified mail where the delivering post office returns the decision to the Department after 7 days and it affirmatively appears that the addressee had not moved nor refused delivery, and the address used was his address of record.

While 43 U.S.C. § 1165 (1982) provides for issuance of a patent to an entryman upon a 2-year lapse following issuance of "receipt" when no contest is then pending, the statutory 2-year period does not begin to run at the time the entryman files his final proof, but begins only upon payment for the land. Where appellant had not paid for the land sought to be patented, but had only paid fees associated with filing his homestead entry, he was not entitled to patent.

Failure by the Government to deliver a notice of contest action brought against a homestead entry within 30 days of commencement of action does not affect the validity of the complaint where notice of the action is given to the entryman in a reasonably timely manner.

The Department of the Interior does not retain jurisdiction to adjudicate the merits of a homestead entryman's claim that he has a valid existing right which is prior to that asserted by Alaska where the land sought by the entryman was tentatively approved for conveyance to the State of Alaska since sec. 906(c)(1) of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act legislatively confirmed all tentative approvals of state land selections, subject to valid existing rights, and conveyed the land in dispute out of Federal control.

The Department is barred by the provisions of 43 U.S.C. § 1166 (1982) from challenging the conveyance of land to the State of Alaska by sec. 906 of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act, confirming tentative approvals of State land selections subject to valid rights, where more than 6 years have passed since the conveyance. Since the lands here conveyed legislatively to the State were tentatively approved for conveyance in 1976, and since the Act makes such conveyance effective as of the date of tentative approval, provision of 43 U.S.C. § 1166 (1982) bars any possibility of Departmental intervention on behalf of the entryman in this case.

LAND GRANTS AND SELECTIONS

When BLM declares a mining claim null and void ab initio because the claim was located on land segregated from entry and location under the mining laws, the mining claimant may rebut that finding by showing that he merely amended a valid presegregation location of the claim. However, to do so, he must show that he is the owner of the claim through a regular chain of title. An unsupported allegation that the previous owner "gave" him the claim 24 years ago will not suffice. The United States has the right to invoke the statute of frauds in order to clear title to the public lands.

Under sec. 6(g) of the Alaska Statehood Act, 72 Stat. 340, the Secretary of the Interior is required, when revoking an existing withdrawal of public land in Alaska, to provide a 90-day period during which time the State of Alaska is afforded a preference right to select the land. Where a public land order revokes a prior withdrawal so as to make the land available for selection by the State, the land may not be simultaneously opened for the location of mining claims for metalliferous minerals, and a public land order purportedly opening such land to mineral location is only effective after the passage of the 90-day period mandated by the Alaska Statehood Act.

The filing of an amended state selection application after the conclusion of the 90-day withdrawal effected by 43 U.S.C. § 1616(d)(1) (1982), reasserts an earlier application filed during the withdrawal. Pursuant to 43 CFR 2627.4(b), a state selection, regular on its face, will segregate the land described therein from all appropriations based upon applications or settlement and location, including locations under the mining laws, when the state files its application for selection in the proper office properly describing the lands as provided in sec. 2627.3(c)(1)(iii), (iv), and (v). Although the occupancy provisions of the Alaska Organic Acts (Act of May 17, 1884, ch. 53, § 8, 23 Stat. 24, 26 and Act of June 5, 1900, ch. 786, § 27, 31 Stat. 330) protected Native and missionary station occupation of lands as of the dates of enactment, neither Act granted a right to obtain title or vested other property rights in the occupants.

BLM may properly declare a mining claim located on land segregated from mineral entry, pursuant to 43 CFR 2627.4(b), by virtue of the filing of an Alaska State selection application, null and void ab initio when there is no showing that the claim relates back to a date of location prior to the segregation.

Sec. 906(e) of ANILCA, 43 U.S.C. § 1635(e) (1982), amended the Alaska Statehood Act to permit the State to file new applications to include lands which were not vacant, unappropriated, and unreserved at the time the sec. 906(e) "top filing" application was filed. Such State selection applications become an effective selection upon the date the lands become available within the meaning of the Alaska Statehood Act. Lands subject to valid mining claims on the date a state "top filing" application is filed become subject to state selection when the claims are abandoned, either intentionally or by action of law.

ALASKA--ContinuedMINING CLAIMS

Under subsec. 906(c)(1) of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1635(c)(1) (1982), when land has been tentatively approved for transfer to the State of Alaska, legal title has been conveyed and the Department no longer possesses jurisdiction over the land and has no authority to affect title to it. This rule applies to land on which mining claims have been located when no exception for a mining claim has been made in the decision granting tentative approval.

Charles Renfro, 96 IBLA 311 (Apr. 2, 1987)

The "date of location" of a mining claim is "the date determined by State law in the local jurisdiction in which the unpatented mining claim, mill or tunnel site is situated." 43 CFR 3833.0-5(h). Absent clear evidence to the contrary in a specific case, under Alaska State law the date of location of a mining claim is the date notice is posted on the claim as recited in the recorded certificate of location.

Dutch Creek Mining Co., 98 IBLA 241 (July 6, 1987)

The filing of an amended state selection application after the conclusion of the 90-day withdrawal effected by 43 U.S.C. § 1616(d)(1) (1982), reasserts an earlier application filed during the withdrawal. Pursuant to 43 CFR 2627.4(b), a state selection, regular on its face, will segregate the land described therein from all appropriations based upon application or settlement and location, including locations under the mining laws, when the state files its application for selection in the proper office properly describing the lands as provided in sec. 2627.3(c)(1)(iii), (iv), and (v). This segregation arises as a result of the filing of a state selection and operates independently of the notation rule.

Public Land Order No. 5251 continued in effect the withdrawal of lands in Alaska from location and entry under the mining laws that was initiated by the earlier Public Land Order No. 5179.

Where, on appeal from rejection by BLM of a Native allotment application pursuant to an adjudication, precipitated only by the filing of a State protest in accordance with sec. 905(a) of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1634(a) (1982), the State withdraws its protest in a stipulation agreed to by all parties, the Board will vacate the decision appealed from and remand the case to BLM with instructions to hold the application for approval under the statute.

Luke F. Kagak, 84 IBLA 350 (Jan. 17, 1985)

Where the State of Alaska appeals a decision holding that a Native allotment is not subject to a right-of-way granted to the State and on appeal the heirs of the allottee relinquish that part of the allotment in conflict with the right-of-way, the issue is moot and the appeal is dismissed.

State of Alaska, 85 IBLA 170 (Feb. 26, 1985)

Native allotment applications describing land in Alaska within a State selection application filed prior to Dec. 18, 1971, are generally excepted from the statutory approval afforded by sec. 905(a)(1) of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act and must be adjudicated under the provisions of the Alaska Native Allotment Act.

Where the record in a Native allotment case contains significant evidence refuting the existence of substantially continuous use and occupancy at least potentially exclusive of others, a decision approving the allotment without any analysis of the facts to support the adjudication will be set aside as unsupported by the record and a contest ordered.

A right-of-way for an electric transmission line issued pursuant to the Act of Mar. 4, 1911, over lands to which, at the time of issuance, an Alaska Native had an inchoate right through use and occupancy, cannot be defeated by subsequent determination of entitlement to an allotment for such lands, and the allotment must be made subject to the right-of-way. A decision holding such a right-of-way null and void must be reversed.

Sec. 905(c) of Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1634(c) (1982), authorizes a Native allotment applicant to amend the description of the land in his application to accurately describe the parcel for which he applied. It does not authorize an applicant to substitute different land.

Joash Tukle, 86 IBLA 26 (Mar. 29, 1985)

An interim conveyance to a Native corporation under the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act effectively conveys title to the land, subject to valid existing rights. A conflicting application based on settlement and occupancy maintained under laws leading to acquisition of title is properly excluded from an ANCSA conveyance. Where a conflicting application has been relinquished prior to conveyance, and hence was not excluded, the Department has no authority to reinstate the application pursuant to a request filed subsequent to the interim conveyance.

Native allotment applications which are protested by an Alaskan Native corporation are not legislatively approved by the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act, sec. 905(a)(1). and occupancy of land claimed for a minimum period of 5 years. Such use and occupancy contemplates substantial actual possession or use of the land at least potentially exclusive of others. Where the evidence in the record does not establish applicant's potentially exclusive use of an allotment, and a Native corporation denies the appellant's claims to the lands sought, the Bureau of Land Management shall institute contest proceedings so that evidence as to applicant's entitlement to the allotment may be presented.

Where conflicting evidence exists concerning a Native allotment applicant's use and occupancy of the land claimed which raises material factual issues, the Bureau of Land Management should initiate a Government contest so that those issues can be resolved at a hearing.

Pedro Bay Corp., 88 IBLA 349 (Sept. 24, 1985)

The owner of improvements located on land described in a Native allotment application has standing to protest the allotment application under sec. 905 of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1634 (1982). Standing to appeal favorable adjudication of the allotment application and rejection of the protest to the Board of Land Appeals requires a showing of a legally cognizable interest adversely affected by denial of the protest. The interest of a trespasser on the land without claim or color of right will not afford such standing.

title remains in the United States. A Native allotment applicant obtains no legal title in land claimed by him prior to receipt of a "Native allotment."

Under 43 CFR 2561.1(c), a Native allotment applicant must describe "as accurately as possible" available lands he claims to have used or occupied in compliance with the Native Allotment Act, 43 U.S.C. §§ 270-1 through 270-3 (1970) if the lands were unsurveyed under the rectangular survey system. Where the description provided "is ambiguous" so that the claimant's entitlement to a part of a trail is not clearly adjudicated under the Act notwithstanding that an allotment of a tract of the land was approved, the decision to grant the allotment will be set aside and the case remanded to determine whether the application included the trail in question and to review the claimant's entitlement to that trail as part of his allotment.

Although available information suggests the possibility an existing trail across a Native allotment claim might qualify as a preexisting R.S. 2477 right-of-way, the Department is not required to adjudicate such rights-of-way. Since the adjudication of R.S. 2477 rights-of-way is primarily a matter for the state courts, and since no Departmental need would be served by an adjudication of the R.S. 2477 roadway in this case, no mention of the right-of-way should appear in the conveyance.

Sec. 905(a)(5) of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act (ANILCA), 43 U.S.C. § 1634(a)(5) (1982), established a specific time limitation for raising objections to the approval of designated Native allotment applications; therefore, a private contest filed by the State of Alaska against such a Native allotment based on the State's claim to certain lands within the allotment as existing Federal Highway Act rights-of-way, which contest is filed more than 180 days following enactment of ANILCA, must be dismissed.

Sec. 905(e) of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1634(e) (1982), provides that prior to issuing an allotment certificate, the Secretary will identify and adjudicate designated record entries or applications for title claiming lands described in the allotment application. A Federal Highway Act grant is neither a record entry nor an application for title within the meaning of that section.

State of Alaska v. Heirs of Dinah Albert, 90 IBLA 14 (Dec. 4, 1985)

An Alaska Native allotment application is not statutorily approved under sec. 905(a)(1) of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1634(a)(1) (1982), if the land is included in a State selection application filed on or before Dec. 18, 1971, but is not within a core township of a Native village. Under sec. 905(a)(4), such an application shall be adjudicated pursuant to the requirements of the Alaska Native Allotment Act, as amended, 43 U.S.C. §§ 270-1 - 270-3 (1970).

The Department of the Interior does not retain jurisdiction to hear a contest against an applicant for a Native allotment where the lands sought by the Native were tentatively approved to the State of Alaska following commencement of the Native's use and occupancy. Sec. 906(c)(1) of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1635(c)(1) (1982), confirming all tentative approvals of State land selections subject to valid existing rights, conveyed the lands in dispute out of Federal ownership thus ousting the Department's jurisdiction to adjudicate title in a contest proceeding.

Although the Department of the Interior loses jurisdiction over title to lands tentatively approved to the State of Alaska and effectively conveyed to the State by sec. 906(c)(1) of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1635(c)(1) (1982), the Department has a duty to Native allotment applicants whose claims lie within such tentatively approved lands to make a preliminary validity determination as to such applications and to pursue recovery of such lands where appropriate. regarding validity of Native allotment claims will fulfill this obligation.

Elizabeth G. Cook, Eya Osterhaus, 90 IBLA 152 (Dec. 30, 1985)

An appeal from a decision of the Bureau of Land Management will be dismissed for appellant's failure to show that she has been adversely affected where BLM's decision held that appellant's certificate of allotment be issued subject to the continued right of public access across allotment lands if survey verifies that a trail crosses the allotment.

Gladys Boquist, 90 IBLA 168 (Jan. 8, 1986)

Prior to the adoption of ANILCA, the mere approval of a Native allotment application did not remove the Department's jurisdiction to reexamine entitlement to an allotment at any time prior to the date the "Native Allotment" is actually issued.

The legislative approval provisions of sec. 905 of ANILCA apply to Native allotment applications which were approved by BLM prior to the passage of ANILCA if the "Native Allotment" had not yet issued.

While a mere trespasser without claim or color of right has no standing to appeal from a substantive decision dismissing his protest under sec. 905(a)(5)(C) of ANILCA, such an individual does have standing to appeal a decision refusing to consider a protest on procedural grounds.

Eugene M. Witt, 90 IBLA 265 (Jan. 31, 1986)

Whenever the Secretary of the Interior makes any conveyance of land under any of the public land laws, he may reserve a right-of-way for trails within the National Trails System to the extent he deems necessary to carry out the purposes of the National Trails System Act, 16 U.S.C. § 1241 (1982).

The Bureau of Land Management may issue a certificate of allotment subject to a continued right of public access along a segment of the Iditarod National Historic Trail crossing through allotment lands. Such a conveyance is an exercise of the discretion vested in the Secretary pursuant to the Alaska Native Allotment Act, 43 U.S.C. §§ 270-1 - 270-3 (1970).

In the absence of legislative approval of a Native allotment, title to the land in an approved allotment application rests with the United States and does not pass to the Native until the land described therein has been surveyed and a "Native Allotment" issued. Therefore, 25 CFR 169.3, which requires that the Secretary obtain written consent from Indians prior to granting a right-of-way across Indian land, does not apply to approved Native allotment applications prior to survey and issuance of the "Native Allotment."

In the absence of a dispute as to a material fact, the due process rights of an applicant for a Native Allotment are satisfied by an appeal to the Board of Land Appeals.

Edward A. Nickoli, 90 IBLA 273 (Feb. 5, 1986)

The effect of a timely filed protest under sec. 905(a)(5)(C) of ANILCA is to preclude the allotment application from being subject to approval under sec. 905(a)(1) and to leave it within previously established administrative procedures to determine compliance with the Native Allotment Act.

While a mere trespasser without claim or color of right has no standing to appeal from a substantive decision approving a Native allotment application under sec. 905(a)(5)(C) of ANILCA, such an individual does have standing to appeal a decision refusing to consider a protest for procedural reasons.

Where an interim conveyance to a Native village corporation under sec. 22(j) of ANCSA, 43 U.S.C. § 1621(j) (1982), is made after enactment of ANILCA, such a conveyance may not be considered a valid existing right under sec. 905(a)(1) of ANILCA, 43 U.S.C. § 1634(a)(1) (1982), and a relinquished Native allotment application may constitute a valid existing right under sec. 22(j) of ANCSA, if the applicant can establish that his relinquishment was involuntary and unknowning.

Peter John, 91 IBLA 305 (Apr. 15, 1986)

Where an application to acquire Federal land is rejected by BLM because applicant's declaration of material facts in the application demonstrates conclusively that he is not entitled to the land as a matter of law, a subsequent effort on appeal to revise, amend, or deny the facts will not be considered, absent a persuasive explanation of error in the application.

Secretarial Order No. 3040 of May 25, 1979, requires the commencement of use and occupancy or the filing of a Native allotment application prior to a withdrawal of the land.

If, when all of the allegations of material fact made by an applicant for a Native allotment are accepted as true, allowance of the application is barred as a matter of law, and the rule of Pence v. Kleppe, 529 F.2d 135 (9th Cir. 1976), is not applicable. The application is properly rejected without a hearing.

Ames Mayo Moore, 91 IBLA 343 (Apr. 21, 1986)

A Native allotment application filed pursuant to sec. 1 of the Act of May 17, 1906, as amended, 43 U.S.C. § 270-1 (1970), is properly denied where the applicant fails to establish her independent use and occupancy as a minor child prior to withdrawal of the claimed land.

ALASKA--ContinuedNATIVE ALLOTMENTS--Continued

Where lands described in a previously relinquished Native allotment application are patented to another, and the applicant requests reinstatement of the relinquished application, the Department has a duty to a Native allotment applicant to make a preliminary investigation and determination regarding whether the relinquishment was voluntary and knowing. If it was not, the application should be reinstated and, if deemed appropriate, the Department should pursue recovery of such lands. When a document stating an intent to relinquish a Native allotment application is suspect on its face, a petition for reinstatement of the application should not be denied until the authenticity of the relinquishment document is verified.

Matilda Titus, 92 IBLA 340 (June 30, 1986)

The decision of an Administrative Law Judge finding that a Native allotment applicant unknowingly and involuntarily relinquished his Native allotment in 1966 will be reversed on appeal where the Judge relies on the self-serving testimony of the applicant, characterizing it as unrebutted, and disregards more reliable evidence, specifically a memorandum prepared by a Bureau of Land Management employee on the same day the relinquishment was secured and a 1976 letter written by the applicant.

Peter Andrews, Sr. v. Bureau of Land Management, 93 IBLA 355 (Sept. 15, 1986)

The Alaska Native Allotment Act of May 17, 1906, as amended, 43 U.S.C. §§ 270-1 through 270-3 (1970), repealed subject to pending applications, 43 U.S.C. § 1617 (1982), authorized the Secretary to allot not to exceed 160 acres of vacant, unappropriated, and unreserved nonmineral land in Alaska to any Indian, Aleut, or Eskimo who resided in and was a Native of Alaska. No allotment shall be made to any person until said person has made proof satisfactory to the Secretary of substantially continuous use and occupancy of the land for a period of 5 years.

Segregation of lands from appropriation under the Native Allotment Act by a proposed multiple-use management classification does not bar completion of the required 5-years' use and occupancy where such use and occupancy has commenced prior to the segregation.

When the Government contests a Native allotment application on the basis of a failure to meet the requirements of the Native Allotment Act and the regulations, the contest is subject to dismissal where at the hearing the Government fails to present sufficient evidence to establish a prima facie case to support its complaint. However, where the applicant goes forward and presents evidence, all the evidence will be considered to determine whether a preponderance of that evidence establishes that the statutory and regulatory use and occupancy requirements were not met.

The standard of proof requirement to be applied in Native allotment cases is the preponderance of evidence standard, rather than the previously utilized standard of clear and credible evidence.

To qualify for an allotment under the Native Allotment Act and regulations, a Native must show substantial actual possession and use of the claimed land at least potentially exclusive of others and not merely intermittent use. Where the established use consists of approximately two trips per year to an area principally for hunting for a total of a few days to a week per trip, such use is properly characterized as intermittent.

United States v. Estate of George D. Estabrook, John J. Estabrook, Leland R. Estabrook, 94 IBLA 38 (Sept. 25, 1986)

A State protest of a Native allotment application filed pursuant to sec. 905(a)(5)(B) of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1634(a)(5)(B) (1982), will be considered sufficient to require the adjudication of the application pursuant to the Act of May 17, 1906, as amended, where it identifies in part, with some particularity, a public interest in access to public lands, resources, or bodies of water which could be jeopardized by confirmation of the allotment application.

issues of material fact regarding the applicant's use and occupancy of the land, BLM will be required to initiate a Government contest so that these issues can be resolved at a hearing.

State of Alaska, 95 IBLA 196 (Jan. 14, 1987)

A State protest against approval of a Native allotment application fails to state with sufficient specificity the facts upon which conclusions concerning public access are made so as to conform to provision of 43 U.S.C. § 1634(a)(5)(B) (1982), where the protest recites that the applied-for land is the site of an existing seaplane base, boat launch, and trail, when it appears none of the claimed improvements are located on the allotment. Since the State's protest does not describe the land claimed by the Native allotment applicant with specificity under such a circumstance, the allotment may be granted to the Native applicant, all else being regular.

There is no authority for the reservation of easements in Native allotments comparable to sec. 17(b) of ANCSA, 43 U.S.C. § 1616(b) (1982), governing reservations of easements in conveyances to Native corporations. An easement across Native corporation lands recognized pursuant to ANCSA may not constitute sufficient grounds for protest of a Native allotment under sec. 905 of ANILCA, 43 U.S.C. § 1634 (1982), where the record discloses the route of access reserved in the easement does not cross or abut the Native allotment parcel.

Such land is not vacant, unappropriated, and unreserved, and hence, a Native allotment application filed for such land alleging use and occupancy commencing after the date of the withdrawal is properly rejected.

The right of an Alaska Native allotment applicant to amend the description on his application where it designates land other than that which the applicant intended to claim at the time of application provided by sec. 905(c) of ANILCA, 43 U.S.C. § 1634(c) (1982), extends both to unsurveyed lands and those lands surveyed prior to enactment of sec. 905(c). This right, however, terminates upon the establishment, by the Secretary, after proper notice, of a date certain on which all requests for amendment must be received or by the adoption, after Dec. 2, 1980, of a plan of survey for either the originally described or the newly described land.

A Native allotment applicant seeking to amend the description of land contained in his or her allotment application has the burden of establishing that the new description correctly describes the land for which he or she had intended to apply. In adjudicating such requests, BLM is required to consider all evidence in the case, file and where such evidence does not clearly establish that the new description represents the original intent of the Native, BLM may not approve the amendment.

Under the Native Allotment Act of 1906, 43 U.S.C. §§ 270-1 to 270-3 (1970), and the implementing regulations, an allotment applicant must show substantially continuous use and occupancy potentially exclusive of others. Using land for a period of a few days each year does not constitute substantially continuous possession or use and is properly categorized as "intermittent use."

that any person on the land, under normal circumstances, knew or should have known that the land was subject to the claim of another. Under this standard, use of land solely for picking berries, without more, cannot be deemed potentially exclusive of others and, therefore, cannot establish a right to a Native allotment.

Angeline Galbraith, 97 IBLA 132 (May 6, 1987)
94 I.D. 151

Sec. 905 of ANILCA, 43 U.S.C. § 1634 (1982), did not operate to legislatively approve Native allotments on land conveyed out of Federal ownership before the enactment of ANILCA. Legislation passed by Congress concerning disposition of the public lands cannot generally transfer title to lands previously conveyed into private ownership and which are, hence, no longer part of the public domain. To hold otherwise would pose serious constitutional problems concerning deprivation of property without due process of law in violation of the Fifth Amendment.

If the Department conveyed land prior to the final adjudication of a pending Native allotment application, the Department would no longer have jurisdiction over the land. Nevertheless, a hearing may be required to decide disputed issues of fact to determine whether the applicant had established a valid existing right to an allotment on the date of conveyance which would warrant initiation of action to recover the land. A hearing is not required if an applicant's allegations of material fact are insufficient, as a matter of law, to establish a valid existing right to an allotment.

Although the Department may seek cancellation of a conveyance which includes land described by a valid Native allotment application, a Native allotment applicant has no valid existing right to an allotment for land conveyed if the allotment application was not pending on the date of conveyance, or, if the application was previously relinquished, there is no showing that the relinquishment was neither voluntary nor knowing.

A duty to reexamine the circumstances of the relinquishment of a Native allotment application in the face of an allegation that it was involuntary and unknown, notwithstanding the fact the land was subsequently conveyed out of Federal ownership, is founded on the special fiduciary responsibility of the Secretary of the Interior to Native Americans. Hence, a BLM decision refusing a petition by the heirs of a deceased Native allotment applicant to consider a previously relinquished application on the ground the relinquishment was involuntary and unknown may be set aside and the case remanded to allow consideration of the circumstances of the relinquishment.

BLM has the authority to determine whether a relinquishment of a Native allotment application was voluntary and knowing and not fraudulently procured in making a preliminary determination whether to recommend a suit to cancel a patent which was issued to the State of Alaska after the relinquishment with respect to land originally covered by the allotment application. Where the applicant requests an oral hearing to present evidence on the validity of a relinquishment, the Board will order a hearing pursuant to 43 CFR 4.415, in which the State will be allowed to intervene.

A right-of-way for an electric transmission line issued, subject to valid existing rights, pursuant to the Act of Mar. 4, 1911, over lands in the open and notorious possession of an Alaska Native cannot diminish the statutory preference right to a Native allotment. Although the preference right is inchoate prior to completion of the required period of qualifying use and occupancy and the filing of a timely application, when the preference right is vested it takes precedence over intervening applications filed subsequent to the commencement of use and occupancy by the Native and the right-of-way will be ineffective to authorize use of lands in the allotment after vesting of the preference right.

Sec. 905 of ANILCA, 43 U.S.C. § 1634 (1982), did not operate to legislatively approve Native allotments on land conveyed out of Federal ownership before the enactment of ANILCA. Legislation passed by Congress concerning disposition of the public lands cannot generally transfer title to lands previously conveyed into private ownership which are no longer part of the public domain. To hold otherwise would pose serious constitutional problems concerning deprivation of property without due process of law, a violation of the Fifth Amendment.

Although the Department may seek cancellation of a conveyance which includes land described by a valid Native allotment application, a Native allotment applicant has no valid existing right to an allotment for land conveyed if the application was previously relinquished, unless there is a showing that the relinquishment was either involuntary or unknown.

Surveys of privately owned lands may not be conducted by the Department at public expense.

Prior to passage of sec. 905(a)(3) of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act of 1980, 43 U.S.C. § 1634(a)(3) (1982), lands containing valuable deposits of gravel were considered to be mineral lands unavailable for Native allotment.

The Act of Jan. 2, 1976, P.L. 94-204, 89 Stat. 1146, as amended, 43 U.S.C. § 1613 Note (1982), provides that "all proceeds derived from contracts, leases, permits, rights-of-way, or easements pertaining to lands, or resources of lands withdrawn for Native selection" pursuant to the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (ANCSA) shall be deposited in an escrow account which shall be held until the lands have been conveyed to the "selecting corporation or individual entitled to receive benefits" under ANCSA. Where lands embracing a valuable deposit of gravel are withdrawn for Native village selection under ANCSA, the proceeds of a material sale contract with the State for the right to mine and remove the gravel are properly placed in the escrow account. Where the land is also within the boundary of an Alaska Native allotment claim pending before the Department on Dec. 18, 1971, which was expressly protected by sec. 18(a) of ANCSA, 43 U.S.C. § 1617(a) (1982), and the selection by the Native village corporation is subsequently relinquished in favor of the Native allotment applicant, the proceeds of the escrow account for such land, upon conveyance to the allottee, are properly paid to the allottee as an individual entitled to receive benefits under ANCSA.

The Bureau of Land Management may reserve a right-of-way for a segment of the Iditarod Trail in its approval of Native allotment applications. Reserving the right-of-way is an exercise of the discretion vested in the Secretary pursuant to sec. 7(h) of the National Trails System Act, 16 U.S.C. § 1246(h) (1982), and the Alaska Native Allotment Act, 43 U.S.C. §§ 270-1 through 270-3 (1970).

The Bureau of Land Management's decision approving a Native allotment application is an interim step in conveying an allotment to the applicant. In the absence of a dispute as to a material fact, the due process rights of a Native allotment applicant are satisfied by the right to appeal to the Board of Land Appeals from the reservation of a public use right-of-way for a designated trail under the National Trails System Act, 16 U.S.C. §§ 1241-1251 (1982), in the approval of a Native allotment application.

If a proper party lodged a timely protest of a Native allotment application filed pursuant to the Act of May 17, 1906, 34 Stat. 197, that application is removed from the automatic vesting provisions of ANILCA, and is adjudicated pursuant to the Act of May 17, 1906. If, after adjudication, BLM issues a decision holding the Native allotment application for approval, the adjudicatory process had been carried to the point of a BLM decision on the merits of the application. Having preserved his rights under sec. 905(a)(1) of ANILCA, the party is entitled to initiate a private contest upon receipt of notice of BLM's intent to grant the Native allotment.

When the decision holding the Native allotment application for approval also rejects a selection application filed pursuant to ANCSA, and affords the Native village corporation the opportunity to initiate a private contest, the Native village corporation has a choice regarding how to continue its objections to the approval of the Native allotment application. It may initiate a private contest or allow the decision to become final and appeal from that decision. If it elects to file a private contest, it is not required to pursue an appeal.

An Alaska Native allotment which has not automatically vested pursuant to ANILCA is properly adjudicated under the Act of May 17, 1906. The question of the validity of the application is separate and apart from the issue of the ownership of the lands named in the application, and the Department has the jurisdiction to address this question, even though the lands described in the application, may have been congressionally conveyed to another party. The Department had an ongoing trust obligation to Alaska Natives, and therefore retains jurisdiction to determine the validity of the Native allotment application. This action is necessary in order to determine whether it is necessary for the Department to take action to recover the land for the benefit of the Native applicant.

An Alaska Native allotment applicant is required to make satisfactory proof of substantially continuous use and occupancy of the land for a minimum period of 5 years. Such use and occupancy contemplates substantial actual possession or use of the land, at least potentially exclusive of others. In a private contest initiated by a Native corporation following a BLM decision holding the Native allotment for approval, the Native corporation carries the burden of showing by a preponderance of the evidence that the Native allotment application is not valid.

A conveyance to a Native corporation under ANSCA is subject to valid existing rights. A conflicting application based on settlement and occupancy maintained under laws leading to acquisition of title is properly excluded from an ANSCA conveyance.

Sec. 905(a)(1) of ANILCA, 43 U.S.C. § 1634(a) (1982), approved, subject to valid existing rights and certain exceptions, all Native allotment applications which were pending before the Department on or before Dec. 18, 1971. Pursuant to Pence v. Kleppe, 529 F.2d 135 (9th Cir. 1976), if a Native allotment applicant is rejected, and the rejection is based on factual issues, the applicant must be granted an opportunity for an oral hearing before a trier of fact before a decision to reject an allotment application can be considered to be final. In such case the application should be reinstated and considered to be pending on Dec. 18, 1971.

Sec. 905(a)(1) of ANILCA, 43 U.S.C. § 1634(a) (1982), approved, subject to valid existing rights and certain exceptions, all Native allotment applications which were pending before the Department on or before Dec. 18, 1971. One of these exceptions which is found at sec. 905(a)(4) of ANILCA, 43 U.S.C. § 1634(a)(4) (1982), provides that when an allotment application describes land which on or before Dec. 18, 1971, was validly selected by the State of Alaska pursuant to the Alaska Statehood Act it shall be adjudicated pursuant to the requirements of the Act of May 17, 1906, as amended. The filing of a homestead entry application segregates the land from all State selection. The filing of an acceptable application for a Native allotment also segregates the land, and a subsequent State application for all available lands, not accompanied by a showing that the applicant for allotment has permanently abandoned occupancy of the land, will create no rights as to the lands subject to the Native allotment application.

Sec. 906(e) of ANILCA, 43 U.S.C. § 1635(e) (1982), permits the State to file State selection applications and amendments thereto, and to refile existing applications to include lands not available for selection under the Alaska Statehood Act when the application is filed. The "top filed" lands will become subject to the selection effective the date the lands become available within the meaning of the Alaska Statehood Act. A State selection made by refiling an existing State selection application incorporates only those additional lands which become available for selection within the meaning of the Alaska Statehood Act on or after the date the selection application is refilled.

When an applicant has filed a Native allotment application prior to Dec. 18, 1971, and BLM has rejected the application, but did not afford an opportunity for a hearing, the reinstated application should be considered as pending on Dec. 18, 1971. Such Native allotment applications are subject to the legislative conveyance provision of sec. 905 of ANILCA if there is no basis for a finding that, by reason of an exception to the legislative conveyance, the application must be adjudicated pursuant to the requirements of the Act of May 17, 1906, as amended.

State of Alaska, 109 IBLA 339 (June 22, 1989)

Generally, BLM has the duty to examine whether a relinquishment of a Native allotment application was knowing and voluntary when the applicant declares it was not. However, where the evidence submitted by the applicant clearly shows, as a matter of law, the invalidity of the claim, it is unnecessary to conduct a factual investigation of the circumstances of the relinquishment.

In order for a Native allotment applicant to gain a vested right to an allotment, the applicant must show 5-year's use and occupancy of the land and the filing of an application therefor. Where a Native uses and occupies land but does not file a Native allotment application for such land and thereafter ceases use and occupancy of the land for more than 20 years, during which time the Federal Government withdraws the land from appropriation under the public land laws, including the Native Allotment Act, a Native allotment application subsequently filed for the land must be rejected.

Where a Native allotment applicant asserts entitlement to a hearing in order to establish when use and occupancy of the claimed land commenced, no hearing is necessary where, accepting as true the applicant's allegations regarding his use and occupancy, applicant is not entitled, as a matter of law, to a Native allotment.

Where a Native initiates use and occupancy of certain lands in 1938, but prior to the filing of an allotment application, highway and power transmission rights-of-way are sought from and granted by BLM across such lands, subject to valid existing rights, the later filing of the allotment application vests the inchoate preference right arising from the use and occupancy, and that right relates back to the initiation of the use and occupancy, thereby taking precedence over the intervening rights-of-way applications. The subsequent legislative approval of the Native allotment in accordance with sec. 905(a) of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1634(a) (1982), precludes any inquiry into the Native's use and occupancy of the land, and the Native allotment is a valid existing right which is properly recognized by a declaration that the rights-of-way are null and void to the extent they cross lands within the allotment.

The effect of issuing a Native Allotment, like the issuance of patent, is to transfer the legal title from the United States and to remove the Department's jurisdiction to resolve conflicts concerning rights to the land.

The Bureau of Land Management's approval of a Native allotment application vests equitable title, but does not vest legal title. This equitable title is susceptible of being administratively modified or revoked by the Department if, prior to issuance of a Native Allotment, the Department finds that the land in question, or any part of it, was not vacant, unappropriated, and unreserved nonmineral land during the period of the applicant's use and occupancy.

A decision vacating approval of a Native allotment application will be set aside if the record is insufficient to justify the conclusion that lands withdrawn by Exec. Order No. 2089 embrace the lands identified in an application.

When it appears an applicant for a Native allotment may not have presented satisfactory proof of his substantially continuous use and occupancy of the land for a period of 5 years, the Board may, in the absence of legislative approval, review the record and act to prevent the mistaken issuance of a patent to the land to one not entitled to it, even if the Bureau of Land Management has already approved the application.

When the Board conducts de novo review of a decision of an Administrative Law Judge who erroneously allocated the burden of proof in a private contest proceeding to the applicant for a Native allotment rather than to the contestant, the Board properly reviews the entire record to determine whether the applicant established by a preponderance of the evidence that he satisfactorily proved he was entitled to an allotment.

Where a Native initiates use and occupancy of certain lands in 1937, but prior to the filing of an allotment application, a conflicting hot springs lease is issued and a public access trail was used to the hot springs, the later filing of the allotment application vests the inchoate preference right arising from the prior use and occupancy. aboriginal use and occupancy but property rights created by Congress.

Subsec. 4(c) of ANCSA, 43 U.S.C. § 1603(c) (1982), bars the assertion of any claim based on prior Native use and occupancy of lands in Alaska. An assertion that a homestead location is invalid by reason of Native use and occupancy of the land requires a showing of use and occupancy at some time in the past, including the time the homestead was located, and thus is barred.

Although the occupancy provisions of the Alaska Organic Acts (Act of May 17, 1884, ch. 53, § 8, 23 Stat. 24, 26 and Act of June 5, 1900, ch. 786, § 27, 31 Stat. 330) protected Native and missionary station occupation of lands as of the dates of enactment, neither Act granted a right to obtain title or vested other property rights in the occupants.

Cessation of use or occupancy for a period of time sufficient to remove any evidence of a present use, occupancy, or claim to the land terminates all possessory interests protected under the Alaska Organic Acts and restores the land to its original status as vacant and unappropriated land, regardless of subsequent allegations that the former occupants never intended to permanently abandon use and occupancy of the land. Unless evidence of continued use and occupancy can be shown, prior use and occupancy does not serve as a bar to the initiation of rights in the lands by others.

The presence of deteriorated partial remains of a church and unattended graves are not by themselves sufficient evidence to establish use and occupancy which is notorious, exclusive, and continuous, and of such nature as to put others on notice that another continues to use and occupy the land.

Under 43 CFR 2091.6-4 and 2627.4(b), the filing of a state's application to select lands, where the filing is regular on its face, segregates the lands from all subsequent appropriation, including location and entry under the mining laws. A selection application filed under the Alaska Statehood Act for land properly described in the appropriate Bureau of Land Management office segregates the land from all appropriation based upon subsequent application or settlement and location.

Lands under navigable waters were held for the benefit of future states, and a State's title to such land cannot be defeated in the absence of legislation making it very plain that the land was not to be granted to the State.

Sec. 12(e) of the Act of Jan. 2, 1976, P.L. 94-204, authorizes conveyance to Native corporations of all lands within Power Site Classification 443, but did not include lands beneath navigable portions of the Susitna River because such lands had previously passed to the State pursuant to the Alaska Statehood Act.

Sec. 905(a)(1) of ANILCA, 43 U.S.C. § 1634(a) (1982), approved, subject to valid existing rights and certain exceptions, all Native allotment applications which were pending before the Department on or before Dec. 18, 1971. One of these exceptions which is found at sec. 905(a)(4) of ANILCA, 43 U.S.C. § 1634(a)(4) (1982), provides that when an allotment application describes land which on or before Dec. 18, 1971, was validly selected by the State of Alaska pursuant to the Alaska Statehood Act it shall be adjudicated pursuant to the requirements of the Act of May 17, 1906, as amended. The filing of a homestead entry application segregates the land from all State selection. The filing of an acceptable application for a Native allotment also segregates the land, and a subsequent State application for all available lands, not accompanied by a showing that the applicant for allotment has permanently abandoned occupancy of the land, will create no rights as to the lands subject to the Native allotment application.

Sec. 906(e) of ANILCA, 43 U.S.C. § 1635(e) (1982), permits the State to file State selection applications and amendments thereto, and to refile existing applications to include lands not available for selection under the Alaska Statehood Act when the application is filed. The "top filed" lands will become subject to the selection effective the date the lands become available within the meaning of the Alaska Statehood Act. A State selection made by refiling an existing State selection application incorporates only those additional lands which become available for selection within the meaning of the Alaska Statehood Act on or after the date the selection application is refiled.

TRADE AND MANUFACTURING SITES

The mere filing of a notice of location for a trade and manufacturing site creates no rights in the land, and, without more, does not create in the one filing an interest in the land as against a subsequent applicant so as to subject the subsequent application to rejection.

The Department of the Interior does not retain jurisdiction to adjudicate the merits of a homestead entryman's claim that he has a valid existing right which is prior to that asserted by Alaska where the land sought by the entryman was tentatively approved for conveyance to the State of Alaska since sec. 906(c)(1) of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act legislatively confirmed all tentative approvals of state land selections subject to valid existing rights, and conveyed the land in dispute out of Federal control.

The Department is barred by the provisions of 43 U.S.C. § 1166 (1982) from challenging the conveyance of land to the State of Alaska by sec. 906 of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act, confirming tentative approvals of State land selections subject to valid rights, where more than 6 years have passed since the conveyance. Since the lands here conveyed legislatively to the State were tentatively approved for conveyance in 1976, and since the Act makes such conveyance effective as of the date of tentative approval, provision of 43 U.S.C. § 1166 (1982) bars any possibility of Departmental intervention on behalf of the entryman in this case.

The owner of improvements located on land described in a Native allotment application has standing to protest the allotment application under sec. 905 of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1634 (1982). Standing to appeal favorable adjudication of the allotment application and rejection of the protest to the Board of Land Appeals requires a showing of a legally cognizable interest adversely affected by denial of the protest. The interest of a trespasser on the land without claim or color of right will not afford such standing.

An administrative hearing before a trier of fact where evidence and testimony of favorable witnesses was submitted prior to a decision regarding validity of Native allotment claims will fulfill this obligation.

Elizabeth G. Cook, Eya Osterhaus, 90 IBLA 152 (Dec. 30, 1985)

If the Department conveyed land prior to the final adjudication of a pending Native allotment application, the Department would no longer have jurisdiction over the land. Nevertheless, a hearing may be required to decide disputed issues of fact to determine whether the applicant had established a valid existing right to an allotment on the date of conveyance which would warrant initiation of action to recover the land. A hearing is not required if an applicant's allegations of material fact are insufficient, as a matter of law, to establish a valid existing right to an allotment.

Although the Department may seek cancellation of a conveyance which includes land described by a valid Native allotment application, a Native allotment applicant has no valid existing right to an allotment for land conveyed if the allotment application was not pending on the date of conveyance, or, if the application was previously relinquished, there is no showing that the relinquishment was neither voluntary nor knowing.

Although the Department may seek cancellation of a conveyance which includes land described by a valid Native allotment application, a Native allotment applicant has no valid existing right to an allotment for land conveyed if the allotment application indicates that use and occupancy began after the land had been withdrawn, or that the applicant was too young as a matter of law to have initiated qualifying use and occupancy at the time of the withdrawal.

Sec. 905 of ANILCA, 43 U.S.C. § 1634 (1982), did not operate to legislatively approve Native allotments on land conveyed out of Federal ownership before the enactment of ANILCA. The Department is not required by Aguilar v. United States, 474 F. Supp. 840 (D. Alaska 1979), to recover title to land conveyed to Atkasook Corp. in 1977, where a Native allotment application describing such land had been finally rejected prior to conveyance on the basis that the land was within the National Petroleum Reserve-Alaska.

Sec. 905(a)(1) of ANILCA, 43 U.S.C. § 1634(a) (1982), approved, subject to valid existing rights and certain exceptions, all Native allotment applications which were pending before the Department on or before Dec. 18, 1971. Pursuant to Pence v. Kleppe, 529 F.2d 135 (9th Cir. 1976), if a Native allotment applicant is rejected, and the rejection is based on factual issues, the applicant must be granted an opportunity for an oral hearing before a trier of fact before a decision to reject an allotment application can be considered to be final. In such case the application should be reinstated and considered to be pending on Dec. 18, 1971.

Sec. 905(a)(1) of ANILCA, 43 U.S.C. § 1634(a) (1982), approved, subject to valid existing rights and certain exceptions, all Native allotment applications which were pending before the Department on or before Dec. 18, 1971. One of these exceptions, which is found at sec. 905(a)(4) of ANILCA, 43 U.S.C. § 1634(a)(4) (1982), provides that when an allotment application describes land which on or before Dec. 18, 1971, was validly selected by the State of Alaska pursuant to the Alaska Statehood Act it shall be adjudicated pursuant to the requirements of the Act of May 17, 1906, as amended. The filing of a homestead entry application segregates the land from all State selection. The filing of an acceptable application for a Native allotment also segregates the land, and a subsequent State application for all available lands, not accompanied by a showing that the applicant for allotment has permanently abandoned occupancy of the land, will create no rights as to the lands subject to the Native allotment application.

Sec. 906(e) of ANILCA, 43 U.S.C. § 1635(e) (1982), permits the State to file State selection applications and amendments thereto, and to refile existing applications to include lands not available for selection under the Alaska Statehood Act when the application is filed. The "top filed" lands will become subject to the selection effective the date the lands become available within the meaning of the Alaska Statehood Act. A State selection made by refiling an existing State selection application incorporates only those additional lands which become available for selection within the meaning of the Alaska Statehood Act on or after the date the selection application is refiled.

When an applicant has filed a Native allotment application prior to Dec. 18, 1971, and BLM has rejected the application, but did not afford an opportunity for a hearing, the reinstated application should be considered as pending on Dec. 18, 1971. Such Native allotment applications are subject to the legislative conveyance provision of sec. 905 of ANILCA if there is no basis for a finding that, by reason of an exception to the legislative conveyance, the application must be adjudicated pursuant to the requirements of the Act of May 17, 1906, as amended.

NATIVE ALLOTMENTS

Prior to the adoption of ANILCA, the mere approval of a Native allotment application did not remove the Department's jurisdiction to reexamine entitlement to an allotment at any time prior to the date the "Native Allotment" is actually issued.

of ANILCA, such an individual does have standing to appeal a decision refusing to consider a protest on procedural grounds.

Eugene M. Witt, 90 IBLA 265 (Jan. 31, 1986)

The effect of a timely filed protest under sec. 905(a)(5)(C) of ANILCA is to preclude the allotment application from being subject to approval under sec. 905(a)(1) and to leave it within previously established administrative procedures to determine compliance with the Native Allotment Act.

"Improvements." As used in sec. 905(a)(5)(C) of ANILCA, the term "improvements" does not carry any special meaning, but rather has its legal meaning in relation to real property. Thus, an improvement must enhance the present value of the land.

A dirt airstrip is an improvement within the meaning of sec. 905(a)(5)(C) of ANILCA.

While a mere trespasser without claim or color of right has no standing to appeal from a substantive decision approving a Native allotment application under sec. 905(a)(5)(C) of ANILCA, such an individual does have standing to appeal a decision refusing to consider a protest for procedural reasons.

Eugene M. Witt, 90 IBLA 330 (Feb. 26, 1986)

A State protest of a Native allotment application filed pursuant to sec. 905(a)(5)(B) of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1634(a)(5)(B) (1982), will be considered sufficient to require the adjudication of the application pursuant to the Act of May 17, 1906, as amended, where it identifies in part, with some particularity, a public interest in access to public lands, resources, or bodies of water which could be jeopardized by confirmation of the allotment application.

Where a Native allotment application cannot be legislatively approved pursuant to sec. 905(a)(1) of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1634(a)(1) (1982), and there are disputed issues of material fact regarding the applicant's use and occupancy of the land, BLM will be required to initiate a Government contest so that these issues can be resolved at a hearing.

State of Alaska, 95 IBLA 196 (Jan. 14, 1987)

A State protest against approval of a Native allotment application fails to state with sufficient specificity the facts upon which conclusions concerning public access are made so as to conform to provision of 43 U.S.C. § 1634(a)(5)(B) (1982), where the protest recites that the applied-for land is the site of an existing seaplane base, boat launch, and trail, when it appears none of the claimed improvements are located on the allotment. Since the State's protest does not describe the land claimed by the Native allotment applicant with specificity under such a circumstance, the allotment may be granted to the Native applicant, all else being regular.

State of Alaska (Elliot R. Lind), 95 IBLA 346 (Feb. 4, 1987)

If a legally sufficient protest is timely filed pursuant to sec. 905(a)(5)(B) of ANILCA, 43 U.S.C. § 1634(a)(5)(B) (1982), the protest takes a Native allotment application out of the purview of sec. 905(a)(1) of ANILCA, 43 U.S.C. § 1634(a)(1) (1982), and the allotment is not legislatively approved. A subsequent withdrawal of the protest would not result in a "revival" of the legislative approval.

Stephen Northway, 96 IBLA 301 (Apr. 2, 1987)

The right of an Alaska Native allotment applicant to amend the description on his application where it designates land other than that which the applicant intended to claim at the time of application provided by sec. 905(c) of ANILCA, 43 U.S.C. § 1634(c) (1982), extends both to unsurveyed lands and those lands surveyed prior to enactment of sec. 905(c). This right, however, terminates upon the establishment, by the Secretary, after proper notice, of a date certain on which all requests for amendment must be received or by the adoption, after Dec. 2, 1980, of a plan of survey for either the originally described or the newly described land.

A Native allotment applicant seeking to amend the description of land contained in his or her allotment application has the burden of establishing that the new description correctly describes the land for which he or she had intended to apply. In adjudicating such requests, BLM is required to consider all evidence in the case, file and where such evidence does not clearly establish that the new description represents the original intent of the Native, BLM may not approve the amendment.

Under the Native Allotment Act of 1906, 43 U.S.C. §§ 270-1 to 270-3 (1970), and the implementing regulations, an allotment applicant must show substantially continuous use and occupancy potentially exclusive of others. Using land for a period of a few days each year does not constitute substantially continuous possession or use and is properly categorized as "intermittent use."

"Potentially exclusive of others." As used in 43 CFR 2561.0-5 the phrase "potentially exclusive of others" means that the nature of the use must be such that any person on the land, under normal circumstances, knew or should have known that the land was subject to the claim of another. Under this standard, use of land solely for picking berries, without more, cannot be deemed potentially exclusive of others and, therefore, cannot establish a right to a Native allotment.

Sec. 905 of ANILCA, 43 U.S.C. § 1634 (1982), did not operate to legislatively approve Native allotments on land conveyed out of Federal ownership before the enactment of ANILCA. Legislation passed by Congress concerning disposition of the public lands cannot generally transfer title to lands previously conveyed into private ownership and which are, hence, no longer part of the public domain. To hold otherwise would pose serious constitutional problems concerning deprivation of property without due process of law in violation of the Fifth Amendment.

If the Department conveyed land prior to the final adjudication of a pending Native allotment application, the Department would no longer have jurisdiction over the land. Nevertheless, a hearing may be required to decide disputed issues of fact to determine whether the applicant had established a valid existing right to an allotment on the date of conveyance which would warrant initiation of action to recover the land. A hearing is not required if an applicant's allegations of material fact are insufficient, as a matter of law, to establish a valid existing right to an allotment.

Although the Department may seek cancellation of a conveyance which includes land described by a valid Native allotment application, a Native allotment applicant has no valid existing right to an allotment for land conveyed if the allotment application was not pending on the date of conveyance, or, if the application was previously relinquished, there is no showing that the relinquishment was neither voluntary nor knowing.

Although the Department may seek cancellation of a conveyance which includes land described by a valid Native allotment application, a Native allotment applicant has no valid existing right to an allotment for land conveyed if the allotment application indicates that use and occupancy began after the land had been withdrawn, or that the applicant was too young as a matter of law to have initiated qualifying use and occupancy at the time of the withdrawal.

The effect of issuing a Native Allotment, like the issuance of patent, is to transfer the legal title from the United States and to remove the Department's jurisdiction to resolve conflicts concerning rights to the land.

The Bureau of Land Management's approval of a Native allotment application vests equitable title, but does not vest legal title. This equitable title is susceptible of being administratively modified or revoked by the Department if, prior to issuance of a Native Allotment, the Department finds that the land in describes land which on or before Dec. 18, 1971, was validly selected by the State of Alaska pursuant to the Alaska Statehood Act it shall be adjudicated pursuant to the requirements of the Act of May 17, 1906, as amended. The filing of a homestead entry application segregates the land from all State selection. The filing of an acceptable application for a Native allotment also segregates the land, and a subsequent State application for all available lands, not accompanied by a showing that the applicant for allotment has permanently abandoned occupancy of the land, will create no rights as to the lands subject to the Native allotment application.

Sec. 906(e) of ANILCA, 43 U.S.C. § 1635(e) (1982), permits the State to file State selection applications and amendments thereto, and to refile existing applications to include lands not available for selection under the Alaska Statehood Act when the application is filed. The "top filed" lands will become subject to the selection effective the date the lands become available within the meaning of the Alaska Statehood Act. A State selection made by refiling an existing State selection application incorporates only those additional lands which become available for selection within the meaning of the Alaska Statehood Act on or after the date the selection application is refiled.

Although sec. 906(c) of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1635(c) (1982), caused all right, title, and interest to the lands to be vested in the State of Alaska upon tentative approval, subject to valid existing rights, that vesting followed the tender of recordation and will not sanction rejection of the tender. Upon the vesting of all right, title, and interest in the State, BLM could no longer adjudicate the validity of a claim located on such lands.

Under subsec. 906(c)(1) of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1635(c)(1) (1982), all right, title, and interest to tentatively approved land was legislatively conveyed to the State of Alaska, effective from the date of tentative approval. The applicant has no valid existing rights to such right-of-way through those lands under sec. 906(c)(1) of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1635(c)(1) (1982), since the right-of-way was not issued prior to the tentative approval.

If a proper party lodged a timely protest of a Native allotment application filed pursuant to the Act of May 17, 1906, 34 Stat. 197, that application is removed from the automatic vesting provisions of ANILCA, and is adjudicated pursuant to the Act of May 17, 1906. If, after adjudication, BLM issues a decision holding the Native allotment application for approval, the adjudicatory process had been carried to the point of a BLM decision on the merits of the application. Having preserved his rights under sec. 905(a)(1) of ANILCA, the party is entitled to initiate a private contest upon receipt of notice of BLM's intent to grant the Native allotment.

When the decision holding the Native allotment application for approval also rejects a selection application filed pursuant to ANCSA, and affords the Native village corporation the opportunity to initiate a private contest, the Native village corporation has a choice regarding how to continue its objections to the approval of the Native allotment application. It may initiate a private contest or allow the decision to become final and appeal from that decision. If it elects to file a private contest, it is not required to pursue an appeal.

An Alaska Native allotment which has not automatically vested pursuant to ANILCA is properly adjudicated under the Act of May 17, 1906. The question of the validity of the application is separate and apart from the issue of the ownership of the lands named in the application, and the Department has the jurisdiction to address this question, even though the lands described in the application, may have been congressionally conveyed to another party. The Department had an ongoing trust obligation to Alaska Natives, and therefore retains jurisdiction to determine the validity of the Native allotment application. This action is necessary in order to determine whether it is necessary for the Department to take action to recover the land for the benefit of the Native applicant.

A conveyance to a Native corporation under ANSCA is subject to valid existing rights. A conflicting application based on settlement and occupancy maintained under laws leading to acquisition of title is properly excluded from an ANSCA conveyance.

ABORIGINAL CLAIMS

With the exception of the rights specifically granted or retained by that Act, sec. 4 of ANCSA, of 43 U.S.C. § 1603 (1982), extinguished all forms of aboriginal title however characterized or described. Its three subsections apply to abolish aboriginal title regardless of whether such title is described in terms of right, title, possession, use, or occupancy.

The phrase "statute or treaty" in subsec. 4(c) of ANCSA, 43 U.S.C. § 1603(c) (1982), applies to all statutes "relating to Native use and occupancy." However, sec. 4 does not extend to extinguish vested rights acquired under statute prior to ANCSA's enactment. Rights acquired by virtue of compliance with statutory provisions are not claims based on aboriginal use and occupancy but property rights created by Congress.

Subsec. 4(c) of ANCSA, 43 U.S.C. § 1603(c) (1982), bars the assertion of any claim based on prior Native use and occupancy of lands in Alaska. An assertion that a homesite location is invalid by reason of Native use and occupancy of the land requires a showing of use and occupancy at some time

Standing to appeal decisions relating to land selection under the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act requires that a party have a property interest in land affected by the decision. 43 CFR 4.410(b). The allegation of ownership and use of lands as a member of the public does not establish standing.

The holder of a current permit from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to use lands selected by a Native group has a property interest or valid existing right derived from the permit which is protected under sec. 14(g) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1613(g) (1982), and such property interest in the land is sufficient to confer standing under 43 CFR 4.410(b) to appeal a decision involving the Native group land selection.

An appellant challenging a decision by BLM to approve land for conveyance to a Native corporation pursuant to sec. 14(e) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, as amended, 43 U.S.C. § 1613(e) (1982), will be deemed to lack standing under 43 CFR 4.410(b) to pursue the appeal of a BLM determination not to reserve a public easement in the conveyance pursuant to 43 U.S.C. § 1616(b)(1) (1976), where the appellant has failed to identify any property interest in public land or has identified only a property interest in private land which is not adversely affected by the decision.

Where the subsurface mineral estate is severed from the surface estate, the owner of the mineral estate retains, either by the express terms of the conveyance or as a necessary implication therefrom, a right of entry or access to the minerals over or through the surface, absent an expressed intent to the contrary in the document creating the severance. Since no such contrary intent was manifested in the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, insofar as lands in Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 4, now NPR-A, are concerned, the Department of the Interior, as the present owner of the mineral estate, is vested with such right of entry or access independent of any contractual grant of access rights.

EASEMENTSGenerally

When considering whether to reserve an easement across a Native land selection made pursuant to the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, the Department must consider, in addition to matters relating to the utility of the easement for the use sought, the impact of the reservation upon the Native corporation. The practicability of the use of other, non-Native lands as alternative easement sites must be considered. Such consideration should include the evaluation of alternative means to obtain the easement sought, including possible licensing arrangements proposed by the Native corporation.

In considering whether to reserve a transportation easement across a Native corporation's land selection made under the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, the Department must not restrict consideration of alternate access to sites which have existing actual road access.

An evidentiary hearing is properly ordered to receive further evidence concerning suitable alternative sites for a transportation easement where the record is inadequate to support a finding that there are no suitable alternative easement sites providing similar access.

Sec. 17(b) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act authorizes the Secretary, when issuing a conveyance for lands to a village corporation under sec. 19 of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, to reserve such easements as are reasonably necessary to guarantee access to major waterways and publicly owned lands. "Notation rule." Where an Alaska Native corporation files an application to select land pursuant to the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, the filing of the application ordinarily will segregate the selected land from any subsequent appropriation under the public land laws and mineral laws until the application is rejected or withdrawn. However, where such an application is irregular on its face in that the land selected is not legally subject to such selection under the provisions of the statute, and no notation of the selection application is made upon the official title and status records of the selected land, the segregative effect of the application is not operative, and mining claims located on the land while such application was pending may not be deemed null and void ab initio.

Nunakauiak Yupik Corp., 87 IBLA 313 (June 25, 1985)

Under the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, the key prerequisite to a village corporation's selection of land was the land's availability for withdrawal under sec. 11(a), 43 U.S.C. § 1610(a) (1982). If not so withdrawn, it could not be selected by a village corporation under sec. 12(a), 43 U.S.C. § 1611(a) (1982).

The provision "withdrawn or reserved for national defense purposes" in sec. 11(a) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1610(a) (1982), includes not only lands formally withdrawn but also embraces those lands which have been effectively reserved for such use.

The language "for national defense purposes" in sec. 11(a) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1610(a) (1982), does not create a special category of lands within those under control of the Department of Defense, but rather serves to distinguish lands held by the military from those held by other Federal agencies.

Sitnasuak Native Corp., 91 IBLA 86 (Mar. 11, 1986)

A decision finding that certain lands are not "public lands" within the meaning of sec. 3(e) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1602(e) (1982), and hence not subject to Native village selection, will be affirmed where the record discloses the lands were used in connection with the administration of a Federal installation during the selection period, notwithstanding the fact the use was abandoned after the selection period.

Unalakleet Native Corp., 93 IBLA 190 (Aug. 15, 1986)

The smallest practicable tract of land occupied and actually used by the Bureau of Indian Affairs as a school during the period of time it was available for selection by a Native village corporation does not come within the definition of "public lands" under sec. 3(e) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, as amended, 43 U.S.C. § 1602(e) (1982), and thus is not available for Native village selection even though the Bureau entered into an agreement during the selection period to transfer use of the land to a State agency.

The Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act requires the Secretary of the Interior to manage lands selected by a Native village corporation in accordance with applicable laws and regulations. The Secretary may issue rights-of-way over, upon, under, or through such land pursuant to sec. 501(a) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1761(a) (1982).

BLM's decision granting a right-of-way for water treatment facilities will be affirmed when the record shows the decision to be a reasoned analysis of the factors involved, made with due regard for the public interest, and no sufficient reason to disturb the decision is shown. Under 43 CFR 2650.1(a), the decision to issue such a right-of-way on land selected by a Native village corporation under the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act must consider the views of the village; if the village does not consent to the right-of-way, the Department must balance the public interest against the interests of the village, issuing the right-of-way only if the public interest outweighs the objections of the village.

PRIMARY PLACE OF RESIDENCE

Criteria

In order to establish a primary place of residence there must be evidence that the applicant resided on the tract applied for as a primary place of residence on a regular or seasonal basis for a substantial period of time.

Where a Native has resided in a dwelling for a 3-1/2 week period (including the critical date, Aug. 31, 1971) on land subsequently applied for as a primary place of residence, such occupancy does not meet the regulatory requirements for conveyance because it is neither regular nor seasonal, nor for a substantial period of time.

Rose Perley Miller, 93 IBLA 147 (July 30, 1986)

In order for a parcel of land to qualify as a Native's primary place of residence under sec. 14(h)(5) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1613(h)(5) (1982), and the applicable regulations, among other requirements, the land claimed must be used and occupied as of Aug. 31, 1971, and a "dwelling" must be located on the claimed tract. A dwelling located on a tract separate from the tract claimed as the primary place of residence will not satisfy the "dwelling" requirement of sec. 14(h)(5) and 43 CFR 2653.8-2(b)(1).

"Dwelling." Under 43 CFR 2653.8-2(b)(1) a "dwelling" is a house or other structure in which a person or persons live, reside, or habitate. A structure useable only as an emergency shelter is not a dwelling for purposes of this regulation.

Since, under 43 CFR 2653.8-1, an applicant for a primary place of residence is only entitled to such land as was actually used or occupied on Aug. 31, 1971, the applicant must show the requisite use or occupancy for each aliquot 40-acre part of the lands applied for.

Under the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act, Native allotment applications pending before the Department on or before Dec. 18, 1971, were approved, subject to valid existing rights, and certain exceptions. Approval does not apply where an allotment has been knowingly and voluntarily relinquished. An evidentiary hearing will be ordered where conflicting allegations give rise to an issue as to whether a relinquishment was knowing and voluntary.

WITHDRAWALS AND RESERVATIONSGenerally

Under sec. 3(e) of ANCSA, as amended, 43 U.S.C. § 1602(e) (1982), BLM may properly exclude land actually used in connection with the administration of a Federal installation during the period of time the land was available for selection by the Native village corporation from an interim conveyance to a Native village corporation under sec. 16(b) of ANCSA, as amended, 43 U.S.C. § 1615(b) (1982).

Pursuant to 43 CFR 2655.2(b)(3)(v), a tract of land used by private logging interests under a permit issued by the Forest Service is excludable from interim conveyance to a Native village corporation under sec. 3(e) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, as amended, 43 U.S.C. § 1602(e) (1982), if the use of the land has a direct, necessary, and substantial connection to the purpose of the holding agency and the lands are not used primarily to derive revenue.

No formal withdrawal is necessary to "withdraw and convey" lands out of the National Wildlife Refuge System pursuant to sec. 14(h)(7) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1613(h)(7) (1982), because the primary purpose of a withdrawal under the Act is to protect the Native claimant from creation of an intervening interest in the property. No such protection is necessary as the lands have previously been withdrawn for wildlife refuge purposes.

AMERICAN INDIAN RELIGIOUS FREEDOM ACT

When recommending that the State of Montana approve a mining plan of operations pursuant to the Surface Management Regulations in 43 CFR 3809 and a memorandum of understanding between BLM and the State of Montana, BLM did not fail to comply with the American Indian Religious Freedom Act (AIRFA), 42 U.S.C. § 1996 (1982). The record shows that BLM made a good faith effort to obtain and consider the views of the Indians and determined, based on the record, that the operations set out in the mining plan would not unnecessarily interfere with American Indian religious values and practices and would not prevent the Indians

Where an application to acquire Federal land is rejected by BLM because applicant's declaration of material facts in the application demonstrates conclusively that he is not entitled to the land as a matter of law, a subsequent effort on appeal to revise, amend, or deny the facts will not be considered, absent a persuasive explanation of error in the application.

Agnes Mayo Moore, 91 IBLA 343 (Apr. 21, 1986)

An application for review of a cessation order will be dismissed as untimely filed if the application is filed more than 30 days after receipt of the order. Such application is properly filed with the Hearings Division, Office of Hearings and Appeals. The effective filing date for documents initiating proceedings before the Hearings Division shall be the date of receipt in that office, if filed by hand, or the date such document is postmarked, if filed by mail.

Coal Energy, Inc., 94 IBLA 347 (Nov. 28, 1986)

Where BLM issues a notice holding mining claims for rejection (that is, where BLM provides the claimant 30 days in which to supply certain information, failing in which his mining claims will be finally declared abandoned and void without further notice), the 30-day period during which an appeal may be initiated with the Board of Land Appeals does not commence until the expiration of the 30-day compliance period allowed by the notice. During the 30-day compliance period, BLM's decision is interlocutory, so that a notice of appeal filed during the compliance period is premature. BLM should treat a notice of appeal filed during the compliance period as a protest and then issue an appealable decision.

However, where a notice of appeal is filed prematurely from an interlocutory decision and the matter is forwarded to the Board of Land Appeals, the Board has discretion whether to remand the case to BLM to be treated as a protest or, instead, to adjudicate the merits of the matter. The Board will reach the merits where there is no practical benefit in remanding the case, such as where the appellant's statement of reasons to the Board makes it clear that he has no information to supply to BLM that will establish that his claims should not be declared void.

Ganawas Corp., 85 IBLA 250 (Mar. 6, 1985)

Regulation 43 CFR 4.410, setting forth the standard regarding who may appeal to the Board of Land Appeals, contains two separate and discrete prerequisites: (1) that appellant be a party to the case, and (2) that appellant be adversely affected by the decision on appeal. Denial of a protest makes an individual a party to a case. Such a denial, however, does not necessarily establish that an individual is adversely affected. Rather, an unsuccessful protestant must show that a legally cognizable interest has been adversely affected by denial of the protest.

Donald Pay, 85 IBLA 283 (Mar. 13, 1985)

United States v. Clyde L. Weekley, 86 IBLA 1 (Mar. 29, 1985)

A hearing is not necessary in the absence of a material issue of fact, which, if proven, would alter the disposition of the matter. Although this situation is not expressly covered by the terms of 43 CFR 1610.5-2(a) (which allows administrative review of approval or amendment of resource management plans only via protests to the Director of BLM, whose decision is final for the Department), logic dictates denial of a request for an amendment of such a plan must follow the same avenue of review. Mullins Coal Co., Inc. v. Office of Surface Mining Reclamation & Enforcement, 96 IBLA 333 (Apr. 7, 1987)

Unlike the failure to file a timely notice of appeal, failure to file or serve a timely statement of reasons or answer does not deprive the Board of Land Appeals of jurisdiction over an appeal. Under 43 CFR 4.402, failure to file and serve a statement of reasons within the time required only makes an appeal "subject to summary dismissal." The Board avoids procedural dismissals if there has been no showing that a procedural deficiency has prejudiced an adverse party.

It does not matter whether a document filed with the Bureau of Land Management characterizes itself as a request for reconsideration or an appeal. Even though an individual may not characterize the document as an appeal, if the submission challenges the findings of fact or conclusions made by an adverse decision, it must be treated as a notice of appeal.

Under 43 CFR 4.411(a), a notice of appeal must be filed within 30 days after the person taking the appeal is served with the decision from which the appeal is taken. The filing of a notice of appeal in a timely manner is jurisdictional, and failure to file an appeal within the time allowed will result in dismissal of the appeal. 43 CFR 4.401(a) provides a delay in filing may be waived if the document is filed no later than 10 days after the deadline, and the document was transmitted on or before the deadline date. When a notice of appeal was due on or before Nov. 27, 1985, and the postmark

Lyman J. Ipsen et al., 96 IBLA 398 (Apr. 14, 1987)

The Board will not dismiss as interlocutory an appeal from a BLM decision which held the appellant's oil and gas lease offers for rejection and required correction of a perceived regulatory defect, but instead will adjudicate the appeal where no useful purpose would be served by remanding the case to BLM.

Beard Oil Co., 97 IBLA 66 (Apr. 28, 1987)

When a Bureau of Land Management decision has been properly appealed to the Board of Land Appeals by an adversely affected party, the Bureau loses jurisdiction over the case and has no authority to take further dispositive action on the subject matter of the appeal. Should the Bureau desire to take such action, it may request that the Board take the action or ask the Board to restore the Bureau's jurisdiction by remanding the case for it to take the action.

Regulation 43 CFR 4.410, setting forth the standard regarding who may appeal to the Board of Land Appeals, contains two separate and discrete prerequisites: (1) that appellant be a party to the case, and (2) that appellant be adversely affected by the decision on appeal. An appeal by a stockholder of a corporation is properly dismissed for lack of standing where the issue raised by appellant is the ownership of the corporation and the decision does not purport to adjudicate that issue.

Greg Williams, 98 IBLA 303 (July 29, 1987)

Under 43 CFR 4.1282(b), notice of appeal must be filed on or before 20 days from the date of receipt of the order or decision sought to be reviewed. The timely filing of a notice of appeal is jurisdictional and failure to file the appeal within the time allowed requires dismissal of the appeal.

Ruth Z. Ainsley, 98 IBLA 306 (July 30, 1987)

An appeal of a rental rate adjustment for Government-furnished quarters will be dismissed when the relief requested has been granted.

In the Matter of the Rental Rate Appeal of Duncan Hollar, 7 OHA 131 (Oct. 16, 1987)

An appeal from a rental rate adjustment for Government-furnished quarters will be dismissed when the relief requested has been granted.

When an issue raised on appeal from a rental rate adjustment for Government-furnished quarters is appropriate for consideration by the agency under 41 CFR 114-52.301(d), the issue will be remanded for such consideration.

A rental rate adjustment for Government-furnished quarters will be upheld when the appellant fails to

In the Matter of the Rental Rate Appeal of Robert E. Johnson, 7 OHA 134 (Oct. 16, 1987)

An appeal of a rental rate adjustment for Government-furnished quarters will be dismissed when the relief requested has been granted.

A rental rate adjustment for Government-furnished quarters that is based on changes in the Consumer Price Index (CPI) is properly deferred 1 year when a rental rate survey is conducted within 6 months before or after the CPI adjustment is scheduled to be made.

In making the Consumer Price Index adjustment for Government-furnished quarters, the agency properly bases the adjustment on the table entitled "Percent Change in the U.S. City Average Revised Consumer Price Index for Urban Wage Earners and Clerical Workers, Rent Series," prepared by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, U.S. Department of Labor.

In the Matter of the Rental Rate Appeal of Ronald M. MacKie, 7 OHA 138 (Oct. 16, 1987)

An appeal of a rental rate adjustment for Government-furnished quarters will be dismissed when the relief requested has been granted.

The annual Consumer Price Index adjustment to the rental rate for Government-furnished quarters may not be used as a vehicle to challenge a prior regional rental rate survey.

In making the Consumer Price Index adjustment for Government-furnished quarters, the agency properly bases the adjustment on the table entitled "Percent Change in the U.S. City Average Revised Consumer Price Index for Urban Wage Earners and Clerical Workers, Rent Series," prepared by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, U.S. Department of Labor.

Where the Forest Service issues a decision determining that certain special stipulations should be included in a readjusted coal lease on National Forest lands and provides the right to appeal that decision through the Forest Service appeals procedures in 36 CFR 211.18, that review procedure must be utilized to challenge directly the special stipulations.

Coastal States Energy Co., 99 IBLA 342 (Nov. 3, 1987)

If an appellant fails to tender the first year's rental and filing fee when appealing from a decision that a simultaneous oil and gas lease application is unacceptable, the appeal will be dismissed for failure to comply with 43 CFR 3112.3(h). If, however, the first year's rental and filing fee have previously been tendered, and have not been refunded at the time of filing a notice of appeal, the previous submittal will suffice.

Pursuant to 43 CFR 3165.4 (1986), decisions of BLM officials implementing the onshore oil and gas operating regulations at 43 CFR Subpart 3160 are an exception to the general rule set forth at 43 CFR 4.21(a), and are not automatically stayed pending appeal. Once an appeal to the Board has been filed, requests for suspension are properly filed with the Board of Land Appeals.

Southern Utah Wilderness Alliance, 100 IBLA 63 (Nov. 30, 1987)

Where an Administrative Law Judge has made an interlocutory ruling that an applicant's failure to file its application for review timely did not deprive him of jurisdiction over the matter, and where the judge has considered and denied OSMRE's request that this question be certified to the Board of Land Appeals under 43 CFR 4.1124, OSMRE's petition for permission to appeal the interlocutory ruling to the Board under 43 CFR 4.1272(a) is properly granted, because resolution of this question will materially advance disposition of the case.

McPeck Mining & Mark E. McPeck v. Office of Surface Mining Reclamation & Enforcement, 101 IBLA 389 (Mar. 31, 1988)

Where BLM conditions its decision that an unpatented mining claim is abandoned and void upon an opportunity to produce evidence of timely filing within the following 30-day period, the appeal period does not commence until the day after the end of the stipulated compliance period.

The effect of 43 CFR 4.21(a) is only to suspend the authority of the deciding official to exercise jurisdiction directly relating to the subject of the appeal. It does not have the effect of suspending BLM's authority to act on matters that are functionally independent from the subject of the appeal. The unavailability of some lands in a noncompetitive over-the-counter lease offer has no effect on the validity of the offer for the remainder of the lands in the offer. Thus, the question of the correctness of BLM's rejection of part of an offer is independent from the question of the status of the offer for the remainder of the lands that it covers, so that BLM is free to accept the offer for the remainder notwithstanding that the time for appealing the partial rejection has not expired.

Robert B. Bunn, 102 IBLA 292 (May 31, 1988)

Coleman Oil & Gas, Inc., 104 IBLA 363 (Sept. 27, 1988)

Generally, the Board will dismiss an appeal challenging the results of a dependent resurvey if the lands on both sides of the disputed boundary have been patented to private owners prior to the time the protest is lodged.

A resurvey conducted by the Cadastral Survey is improperly undertaken to the extent it establishes boundaries between private tracts of land if the survey of those boundaries is not necessary to establish a boundary between private and Federal lands. Once patent has been issued, the rights of the patentees are fixed and the Government has no power to interfere with such rights by resurveying the boundaries.

James C. Mackey, 104 IBLA 393 (Oct. 4, 1988)

Approval or amendment of a resource management plan are not actions appealable to the Board of Land Appeals. However, any person adversely affected by a specific action being proposed to implement some portion of a resource management plan or amendment may appeal such action pursuant to 43 CFR 4.400 at the time the action is implemented. A BLM decision for implementing a resource management plan calling for closure of a wildlife management area to vehicles during fire season will be affirmed when the decision is based on a consideration of all relevant factors and is supported by the record, absent a showing of clear reasons for modification or reversal.

Under the principle of stare decisis, prior Departmental decisions are binding precedent, but may be overruled when found to be erroneous. Under the principle of administrative finality, a decision of an agency official may not be reconsidered after a party has been given an opportunity to obtain review within the Department and did not seek review, or appealed and the decision was affirmed. However, as a matter of administrative authority, so long as title to land affected by a decision remains within the Department, an erroneous decision may be corrected.

"Service." A notice of appeal from a decision of the Bureau of Land Management must be filed within 30 days after the person taking the appeal is "served" with the decision from which the appeal is taken. Where BLM mails its adverse decision to an address other than the person's last address of record and the decision is returned by the Postal Service because a forwarding order has expired, the decision has not been constructively "served." In these circumstances, an appeal which is subsequently filed within 30 days of the person's receipt of actual notice of the adverse decision is timely.

Cherry Hill Development v. Office of Surface Mining Reclamation & Enforcement, 108 IBLA 92 (Mar. 28, 1989)

Under 43 CFR 4.410, the timely filing of a notice of appeal is necessary to establish jurisdiction over a matter. Failure to file a timely appeal has the result that a decision becomes final action for the Department, and the Board will not consider the validity of such decisions in a later appeal. The failure to file a timely appeal from decisions declaring mining claims abandoned and void precludes the Board from considering the validity of the claims in an appeal from the rejection of a patent application for those claims.

When a BLM decision has been properly appealed to the Board by an adversely affected party, BLM loses jurisdiction over the case and it has no authority to take further dispositive action on the subject matter of the appeal until the Board rules on the appeal. However, that does not mean that BLM is precluded from entering into settlement negotiations with the appellant. The rule regarding jurisdiction precludes BLM, however, from finally disposing of the matter without regaining jurisdiction from the Board. Therefore, where negotiations are successful and the parties agree on a settlement after the filing of an appeal, the proper procedure is for BLM to request that the Board vacate BLM's decision and remand the case to it to take formal dispositive action to implement the settlement agreement.

JURISDICTION

Upon the expiration of the 30-day time period for decision established by 25 CFR 2.19(b), the Board of Indian Appeals has jurisdiction over an appeal filed with the Deputy Assistant Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations). However, the Board will not act in the matter unless the appellant invokes the Board's jurisdiction by filing with the Board a separate notice of appeal and a motion to assume jurisdiction, or other document requesting Board jurisdiction. The original filing under 25 CFR 2.11(a) is insufficient to trigger the Board's jurisdiction automatically after the expiration of the time period.

The time for filing a request for a hearing with respect to issuance of a surface mining permit under sec. 514(c) of the Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act of 1977, 30 U.S.C. § 1264(c) (1982), is limited by the terms of the statute and the regulation at 30 CFR 775.11(a) to 30 days from the time the applicant is notified of the decision of the regulatory authority on the permit application. The timely filing of a request for hearing is essential to establish the jurisdiction of the Office of Hearings and Appeals to review a permit decision and a decision dismissing the appeal will be affirmed where it appears from the record that the request was not filed within the time limit.

The Board has no jurisdiction to adjudicate the propriety of a survey conducted by or on behalf of the Forest Service or of decisions by the Forest Service accepting such survey. However, such surveys do not constitute official surveys of the public lands of the United States, as the authority to conduct such surveys and resurveys is vested solely in the Secretary of the Interior, who in turn has delegated this authority to BLM. Thus, a Forest Service survey does not effect any change in the location of a corner, but is merely an

A mineral patent application does not segregate land from the acquisition of competing rights.

The issue of the validity of a mining claim is the ultimate concern of the Department when a patent application has been made, and the Department necessarily has the power to inquire into and determine whether the location is valid under both Federal and state law.

A judgment rendered in adverse proceedings is not conclusive as to matters which might have been decided, but only as to matters which were in fact decided. Unlike litigation over title to real property, the judgment in a judicial proceeding between locators determines superiority of possessory title. Unless mandated by the terms of the judgment, there may be no reason to conclude that, in reaching its judgment, the court made a finding of fact argued for by a party when offering evidence.

The effect attributed to a judgment issued in adverse proceedings must rest upon the judicial authority of the court in resolving conflicts as to facts and making rulings upon applicable law. Although a settlement reached by the parties must be reviewed and approved by the court, if it approves, there is no need to decide the factual and legal issues on which it otherwise would have based its decision. For this reason, factual and legal conclusions stated in a settlement to which the United States is not a party cannot be binding upon the Department.

The filing of and the preliminary injunction order issued in National Wildlife Federation v. Burford, Civ. No. 85-2238 (D.D.C. Under the Confirmation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1165 (1982), 2 years from the date of issuance of a "receipt upon the final entry" an entryman acquires a right to a patent if there is "no pending contest or protest." The statute's wording does not provide for any exception and the Department cannot defeat a right by creating an exception to its application.

Supreme Court decisions that the statute of limitations for initiating suits to vacate and annul patents, 43 U.S.C. § 1166 (1982), does not preclude suits by the United States to annul patents issued in alleged violation of rights of its Indian wards do not apply to permit contest proceedings if the Department is precluded from bringing a contest by the Confirmation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1165 (1982). The Confirmation Act transfers to the courts authority over controversies arising after the 2-year period has passed, and gives the patentee the protection of a judicial forum.

A protest of the acceptance of a notice of location of a homestead which was rejected on appeal could not constitute a protest against approval of an application to purchase filed 3 years later. Until the application to purchase was filed, there could be no final entry to which the Confirmation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1165 (1982), could apply and, correspondingly, the protest could not be a "protest

Where, in computing the acreage of a parcel of land for purposes of arriving at its fair market value in a conveyance to a color-of-title applicant, BLM relied on planimetric measurements of the parcel as depicted on older survey plats and field notes and there is evidence the acreage may subsequently have changed through erosion or accretion, the Board will remand the case to BLM for a resurvey to determine the acreage actually existing in the tract on the date of appraisal.

The Board will not overturn a BLM appraisal of the fair market value of a parcel of land in a conveyance to a color-of-title applicant where BLM considered the amount of land fit for agricultural use (the highest and best use) in comparing sales of comparable parcels and did not consider the unsubstantiated impact on fair market value of future erosion of the parcel. Fair market value is not controlled by acreage alone, but depends upon difference in use, character, and productivity.

A color-of-title applicant is properly accorded an equitable deduction from the appraised fair market value of the claimed parcel of land based on the longevity of the applicant's colorable title figured from the date of acquisition by the applicant to the date good faith possession ceased, as well as an equitable deduction based on the length of the applicant's chain of title.

A color-of-title applicant is not entitled to an equitable deduction from the appraised fair market value of the claimed parcel of land based on the increased costs of financing the original purchase due to discovery of a defect in title or any supposed further doubt as to Federal title.

Increased rental charges for a right-of-way issued under the Act of Mar. 4, 1911, and reappraised under 43 CFR 2802.1-7(a) (1979), are imposed "commencing with the ensuing charge year." The ensuing charge year is the rental year which begins following the date of the decision giving notice of the reappraisal and an opportunity for a hearing.

Pacific Bell, 104 IBLA 66 (Aug. 25, 1988)

An appraisal of the fair market value of a right-of-way will not be set aside on appeal if appellant fails to show error in the appraisal methods used or fails to show by convincing evidence that charges are excessive. In the absence of a showing that the appraisal methods used by BLM are incorrect, an appraisal may be rebutted only by another appraisal.

An application for a reduction in the fair market rental value charged for a right-of-way issued pursuant to Title V of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. §§ 1761-1771 (1982), on the ground of hardship, pursuant to the regulation at 43 CFR 2803.1-2(b)(2)(iv), 52 FR 25819 (July 8, 1987), may be adjudicated for an existing right-of-way where the holder has tendered the estimated advance rental deposit demanded by BLM.

Mallon Oil Co., 104 IBLA 145 (Sept. 2, 1988)

Generally, the Board of Land Appeals will uphold a BLM appraisal of a right-of-way unless it can be shown that BLM has failed to apply the proper criteria when calculating the fair market value right-of-way rental or the resulting charges are shown to be excessive. Absent error in the appraisal methods utilized, an appellant is normally required to submit another appraisal in order to present sufficiently convincing evidence that the rental charges are excessive.

Generally, the proper appraisal analysis method for determining the fair market rental value of non-linear rights-of-way is a site-specific analysis of comparable sites with adjustment for variances in the site conditions.

BLM may reduce rental payments for communication site rights-of-way if it determines that the imposition of the fair market value rental would cause an undue hardship on the right-of-way holder or applicant.

High Country Communications, Inc., 105 IBLA 14 (Oct. 11, 1988)

Generally, the proper appraisal method for determining the fair market value of nonlinear rights-of-way, including communications sites, is the comparable lease method of appraisal. An appraisal may be set aside and the case remanded where the record on appeal shows insufficient analysis of the other leases considered in the appraisal to verify their comparability with the right-of-way appraised.

Communications Enterprises, Inc., 105 IBLA 132 (Oct. 26, 1988)

Tortoise Communications, 105 IBLA 193 (Nov. 2, 1988)

Under the circumstances of this case it was proper for BLM to assign a highest and best use as "rural industrial" to remote lands upon which appellant was building a natural gas processing plant pursuant to a right-of-way. During the life of the right-of-way and prior to appraisal, appellant purchased two adjacent parcels at prices reflecting a rural industrial character, and the purchases were made for fair market value.

When determining fair market value of a Federal tract, those additional costs that a purchaser would normally incur when purchasing the land from the Federal rather than the private sector should be taken into consideration. This fact can be recognized by making a reasonable adjustment to the purchase price of comparable private tracts to reflect the fact that, in an open market, a purchaser will pay a lower purchase price for a tract of land if additional acquisition costs can reasonably be expected.

BLM properly holds a communications site right-of-way grant for termination where the holder failed to pay the annual rental charges for the first and second years of the grant within 30 days following notification of BLM's determination of the fair market value of the grant for those years.

D. R. Johnson Lumber Co., 106 IBLA 379 (Jan. 19, 1989)

Where BLM adjusts the annual rental for a telecommunications site right-of-way based on the comparable lease method of valuation and, following an informal hearing on the appraisal, abandons the appraisal in favor of a market data study of telecommunications site annual rental values, the decision establishing the rental on the basis of the market data study will be vacated and remanded for reappraisal, where the market study did not fully identify the lease transactions relied upon and BLM provided no analysis of how the right-of-way being appraised compared to any particular information in the market study.

Mountain States Telephone & Telegraph Co., 107 IBLA 82 (Jan. 31, 1989)

Where BLM has set the annual rental charges for a telecommunications site right-of-way based on an appraisal of the fair market rental value of that site which failed, without adequate justification, to consider a comparable lease of arguable significance, the Board will set aside the decision setting the rental charges and remand for a reappraisal and any necessary recalculation of such charges.

Richard Boulais, dba Private Line Communications, 107 IBLA 109 (Feb. 2, 1989)

The role of the Board of Indian Appeals in reviewing a Bureau of Indian Affairs determination of fair market value in connection with the taking of a road right-of-way over Indian land is to determine whether the decision is reasonable; that is, whether it is supported by law and substantial evidence.

An appraisal of the fair market rental value of a right-of-way for a communications site may be set aside and remanded where the appraisal report provides insufficient data on leases compared and insufficient analysis of the differences and similarities between the comparable leases and the subject lease to support the appraisal.

Mountain States Telephone & Telegraph Co., 109 IBLA 142 (June 8, 1989)

A BLM appraisal of a right-of-way for a compressor station will be affirmed on appeal where the right-of-way holder has not demonstrated that it was error for BLM to use a market survey of comparable transactions involving the issuance of private rights-of-way rather than the fee schedule for linear rights-of-way or the "before and after" appraisal method.

A Bureau of Indian Affairs appraisal of tribal timber resources conducted for the purpose of evaluating proposed stumpage rates will not be overturned unless it is shown to be unreasonable.

White Mountain Apache Tribe dba Fort Apache Timber Co. v. Deputy Ass't Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations), 17 IBLA 258 (Aug. 25, 1989)

The regulations at 43 CFR 2801.4 provide that a right-of-way grant issued on or before Oct. 21, 1976, shall be covered by the regulations in 43 CFR Part 2800. In turn, 43 CFR 2803.1-2(c)(1) provides, with limited exceptions, that an annual rental payment must be submitted in accordance with the per-acre rental schedule set out therein. A proposed per-acre rental schedule by state, county, and type of linear right-of-way use was published in the Federal Register, and comments were sought. The final rules, also published in the Federal Register, set out a county-by-county rental schedule. Rules and regulations reasonably adapted to the administration of a congressional act, not inconsistent with any statute, have the force and effect of law, and this Board has no authority to declare such rules and regulations invalid. There being no showing that the Department exceeded its statutory authority when setting the rental rate, this Board is obligated to accept the use of those rates. BLM's decision to use rate zones and its use of the rental schedule as the basis for calculating the rental obligations were proper.

When setting the yearly rentals for existing linear rights-of-way not previously subject to the rental schedule set out at 43 CFR 2803.1-2(c)(1)(i), the regulatory provisions found at 43 CFR 2803.1-2(c)(2)(ii) require a rental adjustment if the new rental exceeds $100 and is more than a 100-percent increase over the current rental. The amount of the increase in excess of the 100-percent increase must be phased in by equal increments, plus the annual adjustment, over a 3-year period. A BLM decision establishing a new rental rate for a linear right-of-way, and using the rate schedule for the first time, will be set aside and remanded if BLM fails to phase in the amount of the rental increase in excess of 100 percent of the current rental pursuant to 43 CFR 2803.1-2(c)(2)(ii).

Tucson Electric Power Co., 111 IBLA 69 (Sept. 22, 1989)

Where a BLM determination of the fair market rental value of a communications site right-of-way is based on a market study appraisal which does not comport with a proper application of the comparable lease method of appraisal and fails to provide data and analysis sufficient to determine the comparability of the right-of-way and private leases for similar communications use, the Board will vacate the value determination and remand the case for reappraisal.

Joyce Communications, Inc., 111 IBLA 255 (Oct. 25, 1989)

A linear right-of-way for an electric power line is subject to administration pursuant to Departmental regulations published at 43 CFR Subpart 2803. A linear rental rate for an electric power right-of-way was correctly calculated by using a schedule as provided by 43 CFR 2803.1-2(c)(1)(i), even though the rental increased by more than 100 percent over a rental deposit paid, where the amount of increase was phased in pursuant to provision of 43 CFR 2803.102(c)(2)(i).

Keith P. Carpenter, 112 IBLA 101 (Nov. 28, 1989)

An appraisal of fair market rental value for a nonmineral lease site will not be set aside on appeal if an appellant fails to show error in the appraisal methods used or fails to show by convincing evidence that the charge is excessive. In the absence of a preponderance of evidence that a BLM appraisal is erroneous, such an appraisal may be rebutted only by another appraisal.

Under 43 CFR 2803.1-2(c)(1)(v), the authorized officer is required to use the fee schedule set forth at 43 CFR 2803.1-2(c)(1)(i) in establishing the rental for a linear right-of-way, unless the authorized officer determines that a substantial segment or area within the right-of-way exceeds the zone(s) value by a factor of 10 and in the judgment of the authorized officer, the expected valuation is sufficient to warrant a separate appraisal. When BLM makes the determination required by the regulation, it may properly calculate the rental for a linear right-of-way on the basis of an appraisal.

Where a right-of-way holder charges that the fair market rental value determined by BLM is in error, but shows no error in BLM's appraisal method and provides no evidence to establish that BLM's appraisal is excessive, the Board will affirm BLM's determination.

CONTRACT DISPUTES ACT OF 1978

The position of the Government is substantially justified, and attorney fees under the Equal Access to Justice Act are not warranted where, in connecting with a construction contract, (1) the contracting officer clearly acted reasonably and in the contractor's interest by allowing two claims and reducing the liquidated damages recommended in the Government's post-completion audit, but denying other claims for lack of proof, and (2) the agency later permitted the contractor to submit additional claims and attempted to resolve them by further audit and through interrogatories and by stipulating to certain further entitlements, but requiring the other claims to be resolved by a hearing, in a situation where the Board's ultimate award was primarily by jury verdict.

Attorney fees and expenses will not be awarded to a contractor that has unreasonably protracted the proceedings because of its failure to keep adequate records; its initial delay in submitting its claims; its repeated failures to provide consistent claims data; and its submission of substantial but unmeritorious new claims in its answers to the Government's interrogatories just prior to the hearing.

Susan Totenhagen v. Area Director, Minneapolis Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 15 IBIA 105 (Feb. 12, 1987)

On Mar. 11, 1987, the Board of Indian Appeals entered an order in Idaho Mining Corp. v. Deputy Ass't Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations), 15 IBIA 132 (1987). Although it is not a normal practice of Departmental appeals boards to publish in the I.D.'s any matter which is not a full opinion complete with headnotes, the Idaho Mining order is included for publication because it vacates a previous decision of the Board of Indian Appeals in Idaho Mining Corp. v. Deputy Ass't Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations), 11 IBIA 249, 90 I.D. 329 (1983).

Idaho Mining Corp. v. Deputy Ass't Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations), 15 IBIA 132 (Mar. 11, 1987)
94 I.D. 68

The Board of Indian Appeals and the Bureau of Indian Affairs should give deference to a tribe's interpretation of its own laws.

BOARD OF INDIAN APPEALS--ContinuedGENERALLY--Continued

The Board of Indian Appeals has authority to interpret tribal law in order to review decisions made by the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Menominee Tribal Enterprises v. Area Director, Minneapolis Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 15 IBIA 263 (Aug. 12, 1987)

A petition for reconsideration based on arguments already considered by the Board of Indian Appeals in its initial decision does not demonstrate extraordinary circumstances warranting reconsideration under 43 CFR 4.315.

Star Lake Railroad Co. v. Area Director, Navajo Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs & Navajo Tribe of Indians, 15 IBIA 271 (Aug. 19, 1987)

The Board of Indian Appeals will not consider the merits of a moot appeal where there is no showing that it involves a potentially recurring question raised by a short-term order, capable of repetition, yet evading review.

The Board of Indian Appeals undertakes to interpret tribal law only where there is a clear necessity for it to do so.

Herschel Sahmaunt et al. v. Area Director, Anadarko Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 17 IBIA 60 (Jan. 30, 1989)

JURISDICTION

The Board will exercise its jurisdiction in a matter appealed to it under 25 CFR 2.19(b) only after an appellant has filed with it a notice of appeal, request for the Board to assume jurisdiction, or other appropriate document advising the Board that the 30-day period has expired without decision. The date of filing the notice of appeal is, under 43 CFR 4.310(a), the date the notice is mailed.

Confusion would obviously result if two offices within the Department were to exercise simultaneous jurisdiction over the same persons and subject matter. Therefore, one of the two offices must be determined to have priority, in accordance with Departmental policy.

By informing the Board of Indian Appeals and the parties in writing that he is exercising his reserved authority under 43 CFR 4.5 to take jurisdiction over a case, the Secretary can avoid the potential problems that are likely to result from the simultaneous exercise of jurisdiction by two Departmental offices.

Interim Ad Hoc Committee of the Karok Tribe v. Area Director, Sacramento Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 13 IBIA 76 (Jan. 8, 1985) 92 I.D. 46

The Board of Indian Appeals does not have authority to change a duly promulgated regulation of the Department or to declare it invalid.

David Sohapp, Sr., et al. v. Acting Deputy Ass't Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations), 14 IBIA 100 (Apr. 4, 1986) 93 I.D. 176

The Board of Indian Appeals will not normally consider a legal issue or allegation of fact first raised on appeal. However, when a manifest error has been committed, the Board has the inherent authority of the Secretary to correct that error.

Estate of Philip Malcolm Bayou, 13 IBIA 300 (July 19, 1985)

The Board of Indian Appeals does not have authority to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional.

Under 43 CFR 4.331, the Board of Indian Appeals does not have jurisdiction to review a matter when there has been no final decision by an appropriate official of the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Florida Tribe of Eastern Creek Indians v. Deputy Ass't Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations), 13 IBIA 269 (Oct. 10, 1985)

Neither the Board of Indian Appeals nor the Bureau of Indian Affairs has jurisdiction over issues that are entrusted to tribal courts.

Hawley Lake Homeowners' Ass'n v. Deputy Ass't Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations), 13 IBIA 276 (Oct. 10, 1985)

Upon the expiration of the 30-day time period for decision established by 25 CFR 2.19(b), the Board of Indian Appeals has jurisdiction over an appeal filed with the Deputy Assistant Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations). However, the Board will not act in the matter unless the appellant invokes the Board's jurisdiction by filing with the Board a separate notice of appeal and a motion to assume jurisdiction, or other document requesting Board jurisdiction. The original filing under 25 CFR 2.11(a) is insufficient to trigger the Board's jurisdiction automatically after the expiration of the time period.

Joe P. Sievers v. Deputy Ass't Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations), 13 IBIA 291 (Oct. 11, 1985)

The Board of Indian Appeals does not have jurisdiction to review a decision of the Bureau of Indian Affairs that is based on the exercise of discretion.

Baldy & Baldy, Inc. v. Deputy Ass't Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations), 13 IBIA 322 (Nov. 14, 1985)

The Board of Indian Appeals has jurisdiction over decisions issued by Bureau of Indian Affairs officials under Chapter I of 25 CFR. It does not have jurisdiction over decisions made by duly constituted tribal officials or governing bodies.

The Board of Indian Appeals is not the proper forum in which to challenge an Indian tribe's interpretation of its own tribal resolutions.

Oliver Redfield v. Area Director, Billings Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 13 IBIA 356 (Dec. 27, 1985)

The characterization of a decision rendered by the Deputy Assistant Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations) as discretionary is a legal conclusion subject to review by the Board of Indian Appeals.

Morgan Underwood, Sr. v. Deputy Ass't Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations), 14 IBIA 3 (Jan. 31, 1986)
93 I.D. 13

The Board of Indian Appeals is not the proper forum in which to challenge a tribal ordinance as being violative of the guarantee of equal protection of the laws as provided in the Indian Civil Rights Act.

Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. v. Deputy Area Director, Albuquerque Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 14 IBIA 46 (Feb. 25, 1986) 93 I.D. 79

The Board of Indian Appeals has jurisdiction over decisions issued by Bureau of Indian Affairs officials under Chapter I of 25 CFR. It does not have jurisdiction over decisions made by duly constituted tribal officials or governing bodies.

Vance Gillette, Margaret S. Wilson, & Frank Talker v. Area Director, Navajo Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 14 IBIA 71 (Feb. 26, 1986)

Alta Kane Rogers v. Acting Deputy Ass't Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations), 15 IBIA 13 (Oct. 16, 1986)

Anna Thompson et al. v. Area Director, Eastern Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 17 IBIA 39 (Jan. 23, 1989)

When the official exercising the administrative review functions of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs fails to issue a decision within 30 days from the date an appeal was ripe for decision, the Board of Indian Appeals acquires jurisdiction under the terms of 25 CFR 2.19(b) without regard to whether the decision under review is based upon an exercise of discretion or an interpretation of law.

Quinault Allottees Ass'n v. Area Director, Portland Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 14 IBIA 149 (July 2, 1986)

The Board of Indian Appeals is not a court of general jurisdiction and has only those powers delegated to it by the Secretary of the Interior. It does not have the authority to award money damages against the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Charles Stephens v. Acting Deputy Ass't Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations), 14 IBIA 154 (July 10, 1986)

The Board of Indian Appeals is not a court of general jurisdiction and has only those powers delegated to it by the Secretary of the Interior. It has not been delegated authority to award money damages against BIA or against an Indian tribe.

An appeal from a decision of a Bureau of Indian Affairs Area Director or the Deputy Assistant Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations) may properly be before the Board of Indian Appeals even though a related matter has been decided by the Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs. However, when the parties before the Board are identically situated to those appearing before the Assistant Secretary, and the issues arise from the same transaction and are precisely the same as those decided by the Assistant Secretary, the precedent established by the Assistant Secretary's decision in the similar case is controlling.

Kiowa Business Committee v. Area Director, Anadarko Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 14 IBIA 196 (Aug. 1, 1986)

The characterization of a decision rendered by the Deputy Assistant Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations) under 25 CFR Part 2 as discretionary is a legal conclusion subject to review by the Board of Indian Appeals.

The Board of Indian Appeals does not have jurisdiction to review a decision of the Deputy Assistant Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations) which is based solely on the exercise of discretion.

Frank D. Simmons & Nancy L. Simmons v. Deputy Ass't Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations) & Stanley W. Strong & Wilma Strong v. Deputy Ass't Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations), 14 IBIA 243 (Sept. 2, 1986)

The Board of Indian Appeals does not have authority to declare invalid a duly promulgated Departmental regulation.

Northern Natural Gas v. Area Director, Minneapolis Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 15 IBIA 124 (Mar. 2, 1987)

Joint Board of Control for the Flathead, Mission, & Jocko Irrigation Districts v. Area Director, Portland Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 17 IBIA 65 (Feb. 15, 1989)

Utu Utu Gwaitu Paiute Tribe of the Benton Paiute Reservation v. Sacramento Area Director, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 17 IBIA 141 (June 19, 1989)

Approval of conveyances of Indian trust or restricted land is committed to the discretion of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. In reviewing such approvals, it is not the function of the Board of Indian Appeals to substitute its judgment for that of the Bureau. Rather, it is the Board's responsibility to ensure that proper consideration has been given to all legal prerequisites to the exercise of discretion.

Theodore B. White v. Acting Deputy Ass't Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations), 15 IBIA 142 (Mar. 27, 1987)

Franklin Escalanti v. Acting Phoenix Area Director, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 17 IBIA 290 (Sept. 15, 1989)

The Board of Indian Appeals has jurisdiction pursuant to 25 CFR Part 2 over some decisions rendered by Bureau of Indian Affairs officials in connection with contracts under the Indian Self-Determination Act, 25 U.S.C. §§ 450f-450n (1982), despite the special appeal procedure in 25 CFR Part 271.

Tohono O'odham Nation (formerly Papago Tribe of Arizona) v. Area Director, Phoenix Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 15 IBIA 147 (Mar. 31, 1987)
94 I.D. 120

Where the Acting Deputy Assistant Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations) has characterized a decision as discretionary, the Board of Indian Appeals has jurisdiction to review the decision to the extent of the legal conclusions reached.

Navajo Nation v. Acting Deputy Ass't Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations), 15 IBIA 179 (May 15, 1987)

Upon the expiration of the 30-day time period established by 25 CFR 2.19(b), any party to an appeal pending before the Bureau of Indian Affairs official exercising the review authority of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may invoke the jurisdiction of the Board of Indian Appeals.

Star Lake Railroad Co. v. Area Director, Navajo Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs & Navajo Tribe of Indians, 15 IBIA 220 (July 10, 1987) 94 I.D. 353

The fact that an Indian probate appeal is pending before the Board of Indian Appeals does not give the Board jurisdiction over an allegedly related Bureau of Indian Affairs decision which has no effect on the decision on appeal.

Estate of Frank Tooahimpah, 15 IBIA 258 (Aug. 10, 1987)

Although the Board of Indian Appeals does not have general review jurisdiction over decisions of the Assistant Secretary--Indian Affairs, 43 CFR 4.330 permits the Assistant Secretary to refer any matter concerning Indians to the Board.

Falcon Lake Properties v. Ass't Secretary--Indian Affairs, 15 IBIA 286 (Sept. 29, 1987)

A tribal official who received adequate notice of tribal proceedings to remove him/her from office but who failed to exhaust tribal remedies may not challenge the tribal proceedings in a Department of the Interior forum.

Susan Totenhagen v. Area Director, Minneapolis Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 16 IBIA 9 (Nov. 19, 1987)

The Board of Indian Appeals is not a court of general jurisdiction and has only those powers delegated to it by the Secretary of the Interior. It has not been delegated authority to award money damages against the Bureau of Indian Affairs or any other party.

Joel LeRoy Henderson v. Area Director, Portland Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 16 IBIA 169 (July 14, 1988)

When an appeal is referred to the Board of Indian Appeals by the Washington office of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, that referral includes the authority to decide the issues raised.

Unless the Department of the Interior is otherwise given authority to review questions of tribal membership, tribes conclusively determine membership for those purposes over which they have complete control. However, when Departmental action is authorized based upon questions of tribal membership, the Department has authority to consider enrollment questions.

Ronald T. Welch et al. v. Area Director, Minneapolis Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 16 IBIA 180 (July 22, 1988)

A letter signed by a Bureau of Indian Affairs official which has the effect of denying relief to an appellant is appealable pursuant to 25 CFR part 2 even though the letter states that the official is unable to decide the appeal at that time.

Ojibla Sioux Tribe v. Area Director, Aberdeen Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 16 IBIA 201 (Aug. 18, 1988)

The Board of Indian Appeals has jurisdiction pursuant to 25 CFR Part 2 over some decisions rendered by Bureau of Indian Affairs officials in connection with contracts under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act, 25 U.S.C. §§ 450f-450n (1982), despite the special appeal procedures in 25 CFR Part 271.

Under 25 CFR 271.25 and 271.82, jurisdiction to review a declination to contract under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act, 25 U.S.C. §§ 450f-450n (1982), rests with the Assistant Secretary--Indian Affairs. Declination to contract issues raised in an appeal pending before the Board of Indian Appeals are properly dismissed and referred to the Assistant Secretary.

The Tule River Indian Reservation v. Area Director, Sacramento Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 17 IBIA 21 (Dec. 7, 1988)

Under 25 CFR 88.1(c), a decision of a Bureau of Indian Affairs Area Director approving, disapproving, or conditionally approving a tribal attorney contract is final for the Department and is not subject to appeal with the Department.

Ronald T. Welch et al. v. Area Director, Minneapolis Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 17 IBIA 56 (Jan. 30, 1989)

The Board of Indian Appeals lacks authority to review a decision of a Bureau of Indian Affairs official insofar as it is based on the exercise of discretion. However, the Board has authority to determine whether proper procedures were followed in reaching the decision.

Angelita Aunko Hamilton v. Acting Anadarko Area Director, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 17 IBIA 152 (June 21, 1989)

The decision whether to acquire land in trust status for an Indian tribe or individual is committed to the discretion of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. In reviewing such a decision, it is not the function of the Board of Indian Appeals to substitute its judgment for that of the Bureau. Rather, it is the Board's responsibility to ensure that proper consideration was given to all legal prerequisites to the exercise of discretion.

City of Eagle Butte, South Dakota v. Aberdeen Area Director, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 17 IBIA 192 (July 25, 1989) 96 I.D. 328

Naomi Haikey Eades v. Muskogee Area Director, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 17 IBIA 198 (July 26, 1989)

Roberta C. Weckeah Bradley v. Anadarko Area Director, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 17 IBIA 210 (Aug. 2, 1989)

The Board of Indian Appeals is not a court of general jurisdiction and has only those powers delegated to it by the Secretary of the Interior. It has not been delegated authority to award money damages against officials of the Bureau of Indian Affairs for their incorrect interpretation of regulations.

Esthervon (Kee) Spencer v. Navajo Area Director, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 17 IBIA 226 (Aug. 17, 1989)

The determination whether to approve stumpage rates under a timber sale contract between a tribe and its tribal forest enterprise is committed to the discretion of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. In reviewing such a decision, it is not the function of the Board of Indian Appeals to substitute its judgment for that of the Bureau. Rather, it is the Board's responsibility to ensure that proper consideration was given to all legal prerequisites to the exercise of discretion.

The appeal procedures in 25 CFR Part 2 do not apply to the protest of an award of a Federal procurement contract by a Bureau of Indian Affairs contracting officer, because procedures for such protests are set out in the Federal Acquisition Regulations, 48 CFR Parts 33.1 and 1433.1. The Board of Indian Appeals lacks jurisdiction over such protests.

United Sioux Tribes Development Corp. v. Aberdeen Area Director, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 17 IBIA 286 (Sept. 14, 1989)

25 CFR 162.5(b)(2) vests the Secretary with discretion to approve the lease of tribal land to the Bureau of Indian Affairs, inter alia, at a nominal rental. In light of this regulatory provision, the decision whether the Bureau should pay fair market value to lease tribal land is committed to the Bureau's discretion. In reviewing such decisions, it is not the function of the Board of Indian Appeals to substitute its judgment for that of the Bureau. Rather, it is the Board's responsibility to ensure that proper consideration has been given to all legal prerequisites to the exercise of discretion.

San Carlos Apache Tribe v. Acting Phoenix Area Director, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 17 IBIA 299 (Sept. 21, 1989)

In reviewing a decision of the Bureau of Indian Affairs concerning whether land held in Indian trust or restricted status should be partitioned, it is not the function of the Board of Indian Appeals to substitute its judgment for that of the Bureau. Rather, it is the Board's responsibility to ensure that proper consideration has been given to all legal prerequisites to the exercise of discretion.

Ritho Romo v. Acting Phoenix Area Director, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 18 IBIA 16 (Oct. 5, 1989)

The approval of requests to acquire land in trust status for an Indian tribe or individual is committed to the discretion of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. In reviewing such decisions, it is not the function of the Board of Indian Appeals to substitute its judgment for that of the Bureau. Rather, it is the Board's responsibility to ensure that proper consideration was given to all legal prerequisites to the exercise of discretion.

John Ross, Jr. v. Acting Muskogee Area Director, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 18 IBIA 31 (Oct. 20, 1989)

Town of Charlestown, Rhode Island v. Eastern Area Director, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 18 IBIA 67 (Dec. 5, 1989)

Decisions concerning whether a tribe's application for a Core Management grant should be funded are committed to the discretion of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. In reviewing such decisions, it is not the function of the Board of Indian Appeals to substitute its judgment for that of the Bureau. Rather, it is the Board's responsibility to ensure that proper consideration was given to all legal prerequisites to the exercise of discretion.

Lower Elwha Tribe v. Portland Area Director, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 18 IBIA 50 (Nov. 8, 1989)

Caddo Indian Tribe of Oklahoma v. Acting Anadarko Area Director, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 18 IBIA 63 (Nov. 16, 1989)

Stillaguamish Tribe v. Portland Area Director, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 18 IBIA 89 (Dec. 20, 1989)

BOARD OF LAND APPEALS

As an appellate tribunal, the Board of Land Appeals may not make initial adjudicatory decisions on matters which should properly be submitted to and decided by BLM, nor does the Board render advisory opinions.

Edgar W. White, 85 IBLA 161 (Feb. 25, 1985)

As an appellate tribunal, the Board of Land Appeals may not make initial adjudicatory decisions on matters which properly should be submitted to and decided by BLM, nor does the Board render advisory opinions.

State of Alaska, 85 IBLA 170 (Feb. 26, 1985)

While it is within the province of the judicial branch to adjudicate the constitutionality of statutes, it is outside the jurisdiction of the Board. The legislative history of the Act of July 6, 1960, 74 Stat. 334 (Sisk Act) shows Congress fully considered the constitutionality of the compensation provisions therein. The Department is bound to follow those provisions.

Frederick Siemon, 86 IBLA 149 (Apr. 25, 1985)

A decision by BLM denying a request to amend an existing resource management plan or a management framework plan is not subject to appeal to the Board of Land Appeals. Although this situation is not expressly covered by the terms of 43 CFR 1610.5-2(a) (which allows administrative review of approval or amendment of resource management plans only via protests to the Director of BLM, whose decision is final for the Department), logic dictates denial of a request for an amendment of such a plan must follow the same avenue of review. It is distinguishable from actions on applications following classification or decisions implementing a management plan or amendment, which are appealable to this Board.

Approval of an activity plan, such as a recreation management plan compiled to implement a resource management plan amendment, is a decision appealable to the Board of Land Appeals. However, approval or amendment of a resource management plan is by regulation 43 CFR 1610.5-2 subject to review only by the Director, Bureau of Land Management, whose decision is final for the Department of the Interior.

Wilderness Society et al., 90 IBLA 221 (Jan. 30, 1986)

The Board of Land Appeals has well-established rules governing consideration of estoppel issues. They are the elements of estoppel described in United States v. Georgia Pacific Co., 421 F.2d 92 (9th Cir. 1970); the rule that estoppel is an extraordinary remedy, especially as it relates to public lands; and the rule that estoppel against the Government must be based upon affirmative misconduct.

Where BLM publishes in the Federal Register notice of intent to file a plat of dependent resurvey and omitted lands survey and subsequently, in response to objections, publishes notice in the Federal Register of the staying of the filing stating the plat will not be filed "until the day after all protests have been resolved or subsequent appeals have been decided by the Interior Board of Land Appeals," yet proceeds to file the plat prior thereto and without further notification to the public, on appeal the Board of Land Appeals will vacate such filing.

Under 43 CFR 4.1, the Board of Land Appeals is empowered to consider and determine issues raised on appeal as fully and finally as might the Secretary. In considering the significance of actions taken by BLM, the Secretary is not estopped by the principles of res judicata or finality of administrative action from correcting or reversing an erroneous decision by his subordinates or predecessors-in-interest. It necessarily follows that the Board, in exercising the Secretary's review authority, is not required to accept as precedent erroneous decisions made by the Secretary's subordinates.

Peabody Coal Co., 93 IBLA 317 (Sept. 11, 1986) 93 I.D. 394

The Board of Land Appeals is not bound by the permitting scheme established by Congress in fashioning relief in an administrative review proceeding in which issuance of a permit to mine has been challenged, where the party seeking review has actively waived or acquiesced to a waiver of the review deadlines in 30 U.S.C. § 1264(c) (1982).

Natural Defense Council, Inc., et al. (Petitioners) v. Office of Surface Mining Reclamation & Enforcement (Respondent), West Elk Coal Co. (Intervenor), State of Colorado (Intervenor), 94 IBLA 269 (Nov. 18, 1986) 93 I.D. 417

Pursuant to provision of 30 U.S.C. § 1276(a)(1) (1982) an attack upon the validity of the Secretary's regulations published pursuant to the Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act of 1977 may be heard only in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia. An attack upon the validity of 30 CFR 843.12(a)(2) may not, as a consequence, be entertained by the Interior Board of Land Appeals.

Approval or amendment of a resource management plan may only be reviewed by the Director, Bureau of Land Management, in accordance with 43 CFR 1610.5-2. Idaho Natural Resources Legal Foundation, Inc., 94 I.D. 35 96 IBLA 19 (Feb. 26, 1987)

The Bureau of Land Management has no authority to establish appeals procedures for the disposition of matters which are exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Board of Land Appeals, except by duly promulgated regulation.

When a notice of appeal is timely filed, the Bureau of Land Management loses jurisdiction over the case and has no further authority to take any action on the subject matter of the appeal. The relevant case files should then be transmitted to the Board of Land Appeals immediately.

James C. Mackey, 96 IBLA 356 (Apr. 10, 1987) 94 I.D. 132

A party asserting a claim of estoppel based on a misrepresentation must be ignorant of the true facts and his reliance on the misrepresentation must be reasonable under the circumstances. Where appellant knew certain oil and gas leases were allegedly expired for lack of production from a communitized well, BLM will not be estopped to hold the leases expired based on a representation of a BLM employee without knowledge of the production status that, based on the records, the leases were in effect.

Landmark Exploration Co., 97 IBLA 96 (Apr. 29, 1987)

The Board of Land Appeals need not decide whether a permittee could retroactively take advantage of an amended regulation allowing for extensions of the abatement period where there is no evidence in the record which would show affirmatively the permittee's entitlement to such an extension, even if it were available.

Grays Knob Coal Co. v. Office of Surface Mining Reclamation & Enforcement, 98 IBLA 171 (June 24, 1987)

Under 43 CFR 4.1 and 43 CFR 4.1(b)(3), the Board of Land Appeals, as the authorized representative of the Secretary of the Interior with the authority to decide finally for the Department appeals concerning the use and disposition of public lands, is not estopped by the principles of res judicata or finality of administrative action from correcting or reversing an erroneous decision by the Secretary's subordinates or predecessors in interest.

Northwest Alaskan Pipeline Co., 99 IBLA 201 (Oct. 13, 1987)

The Board of Land Appeals has well-established rules governing consideration of estoppel issues. They are the elements of estoppel described in United States v. Georgia-Pacific Co., 421 F.2d 92 (9th Cir. 1970); the rule that estoppel is an extraordinary remedy especially as it relates to public lands; and the rule that estoppel against the Government must be based upon affirmative misconduct.

The Board of Land Appeals has expressly ruled that, as a precondition for evoking the defense of estoppel, the erroneous advice upon which reliance is predicated must be in the form of a crucial misstatement in an official decision.

Bill Smith Coal Co. v. Office of Surface Mining Reclamation & Enforcement, 101 IBLA 224 (Feb. 26, 1988)

Challenges to the approval or amendment of a resource management plan and its related environmental impact statement are accorded administrative review only in conformity with the protest procedures prescribed by 43 CFR part 1600.

BLM except in the context of an actual case in controversy over which the Board has jurisdiction. The Board will not consider challenges to policy statements issued by BLM, or give opinions on abstract propositions.

Headwaters, Inc., et al., 101 IBLA 234 (Feb. 29, 1988)

If an appellant's notice of appeal did not include a statement of reasons for the appeal, under 43 CFR 4.412(a), the appellant must file such a statement with the Board of Land Appeals within 30 days after the notice of appeal was filed. However, under 43 CFR 4.22(f), the Board may extend the time for filing a statement of reasons. Under 43 CFR 4.402(a), failure to file the statement of reasons within the time allowed (either by 43 CFR 4.412(a), or by the Board in an order granting an extension) subjects the appeal to summary dismissal. Where no statement of reasons is ever filed and no reason is offered for the failure to file, the appeal is properly dismissed.

Robert L. True (d.b.a. Comanche Enterprises), Petroleum Research Corp., et al., SATELLITE 8303116, 101 IBLA 320 (Mar. 17, 1988)

Where an Administrative Law Judge decides after a hearing that a Native allotment applicant is not entitled to the lands applied for, the Board will not approve a settlement agreement under which a portion of those lands would be conveyed to the applicant without a de novo review of the record to determine whether the Administrative Law Judge's decision is correct.

Ira Wassillie, 103 IBLA 112 (July 19, 1988)

Challenges to the validity of a national rule promulgated by the Secretary under the Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act of 1977 may only be brought to the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia in accordance with 30 U.S.C. § 1276(a) (1982). The Board of Land Appeals does not have jurisdiction to rule on such a challenge. The Board

Alternate Fuels, Inc. v. Office of Surface Mining Reclamation & Enforcement, 103 IBLA 187 (July 21, 1988)

An alleged misrepresentation by BLM of mining claim recordation requirements is not an appropriate basis for equitable estoppel where the party asserting estoppel could have become aware of the true requirements by reference to explicit provisions of the governing Federal statute and Departmental regulations. Furthermore, a claim of estoppel based on appellants' vague allegations that they made the filing "on the instruction from the BLM office" fails, because appellants have not established that BLM made a crucial misstatement in an official decision or otherwise engaged in any "official misconduct."

Henry E. Krizman et al., 104 IBLA 9 (Aug. 15, 1988)

Any party adversely affected by a decision of the Bureau of Land Management on an application for a permit to drill under 43 CFR 3162.3-1 may request administrative review by the State Director of the Bureau of Land Management in accordance with 43 CFR 3165.3(b). Any party adversely affected by the decision of the State Director under 43 CFR 3165.3(b) may appeal that decision to the Board of Land Appeals.

San Juan Citizens Alliance, 104 IBLA 288 (Sept. 14, 1988)

When the Board of Land Appeals reduces the number of points assigned for a violation to fewer than 30, and that violation is not contained in a cessation order, in accordance with 30 CFR 723.12(c), the assessment of a civil penalty is discretionary and the factors in 30 CFR 723.13(b) are to be taken into consideration.

National Mines Corp. v. Office of Surface Mining Reclamation & Enforcement, 104 IBLA 331 (Sept. 23, 1988)

Any affected person who desires to challenge the issuance or denial of a cultural resource use permit must follow the procedures embodied in 43 CFR 7.36. Until the review process set forth in this regulation has been exhausted, and BLM has had the opportunity to consider and rule on an appellant's challenge in the first instance, the matter is not ripe for review by this Board.

James C. Mackey, 104 IBLA 393 (Oct. 4, 1988)

Where an operator begins excavation of coal on Federal lands without a Federal permit, negotiates with OSMRE to suspend enforcement action pending litigation in Federal court of the need for a Federal permit, and ceases operations in reliance upon the agreement, OSMRE is bound by the terms of the agreement made with the operator and may not issue a notice of violation for conditions created by the agreement itself.

Gabriel Energy Corp. v. Office of Surface Mining Reclamation & Enforcement, 105 IBLA 53 (Oct. 17, 1988)

Approval or amendment of a resource management plan are not actions appealable to the Board of Land Appeals. However, any person adversely affected by a specific action being proposed to implement some portion of a resource management plan or amendment may appeal such action pursuant to 43 CFR 4.400 at the time the action is implemented. A BLM decision implementing a resource management plan calling for closure of a wildlife management area to vehicles during fire season will be affirmed when the decision is based on a consideration of all relevant factors and is supported by the record, absent a showing of clear reasons for modification or reversal.

Under the principle of stare decisis, prior Departmental decisions are binding precedent, but may be overruled when found to be erroneous. Under the principle of administrative finality, a decision of an agency official may not be reconsidered after a party has been given an opportunity to obtain review within the Department and did not seek review, or appealed and the decision was affirmed. However, as a matter of administrative authority, so long as title to land affected by a decision remains within the Department, an erroneous decision may be corrected.

United States of America v. Vernard E. Jones, Cook Inlet Region, Inc., Nondalton Native Corp., Nondalton City Council, Nondalton Village Council (Intervenors), 106 IBLA 230 (Dec. 29, 1988) 95 I.D. 314

The Board of Land Appeals does not have jurisdiction to review appeals of decisions to approve or amend a resource management plan. Because a resource management plan establishes management policy, its approval is subject only to protest to the Director of the Bureau of Land Management, whose decision is final for the Department. Nor does the Board possess authority to review land classification determinations made by BLM. However, actions on applications following classification of land and decisions which implement a management plan or amendment are appealable to the Board.

The Desert Tortoise Habitat Management Plan is a document designed to guide and control future management actions and does not take specific action or implement a decision or action. The "management actions" it identifies are not the type of specific actions or land-use decisions which are appealable to the Board.

California Ass'n of Four Wheel Drive Clubs, Inc., 108 IBLA 140 (Apr. 3, 1989)

The Board of Land Appeals does not have jurisdiction to review appeals of decisions to approve or amend a resource management plan or land classification determinations rendered by BLM. Because a resource management plan establishes management policy, its approval is subject only to protest to the Director, BLM, whose decision is final for the Department. On the other hand, actions on applications following classification of land and decisions which implement a resource management plan or amendment are appealable to the Board.

The Wilderness Society, 109 IBLA 175 (June 9, 1989)

Where at the time of permit approval under a Federal lands program in a state without a cooperative agreement, OSMRE conditions permit approval on a state regulatory program regulation regarding subsidence control, such a condition is proper and this Board has no jurisdiction to entertain an argument that the regulation is more stringent than standards required by the Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act of 1977, and, therefore, unenforceable under state law.

Old Ben Coal Co. v. Office of Surface Mining Reclamation & Enforcement, 109 IBLA 362 (June 23, 1989)

The Board has no jurisdiction to adjudicate the propriety of a survey conducted by or on behalf of the Forest Service or of decisions by the Forest Service accepting such survey. However, such surveys do not constitute official surveys of the public lands of the United States, as the authority to conduct such surveys and resurveys is vested solely in the Secretary of the Interior, who in turn has delegated this authority to BLM. Thus, a Forest Service survey does not effect any change in the location of a corner, but is merely an administrative survey which the Forest Service uses in managing the National Forests.

Wilogene Simpson et al., 110 IBLA 271 (Sept. 13, 1989)

When it appears an applicant for a Native allotment may not have presented satisfactory proof of his substantially continuous use and occupancy of the land for a period of 5 years, the Board may, in the absence of legislative approval, review the record and act to prevent the mistaken issuance of a patent to the land to one not entitled to it, even if the Bureau of Land Management has already approved the application.

The motivation of the Forest Service in seeking the initiation of a contest against a mining claim located on National Forest lands is irrelevant, and once the Forest Service recommends the initiation of a contest to determine the validity of a mining claim and the Bureau of Land Management has determined that the elements of a contest are present, it is not the function of the Board of Land Appeals to inquire into the reasons or the justifications for the initiation of such a proceeding.

United States v. Bruce V. Opperman, 111 IBLA 152 (Oct. 2, 1989)

BOUNDARIES

(See also Accretion, Avulsion, Public Lands, Reliction, Surveys of Public Lands--if included in this Index.)

When a patent to the land incorporates by reference a description of the land as being bounded by a river and the land described in the color-of-title application is for the land accreted to the applicant's property, the applicant as the riparian owner has title to the accreted lands. Neither a color-of-title application nor a sale of the lands to the applicant by BLM would be proper.

Where BLM has rejected a color-of-title application for land described as being bounded on the north by a river and there is evidence showing that the applicant may in fact have color of title to the land if it avulsed to her property, the decision will be set aside and remanded to BLM for consideration of whether title to the land is in the United States.

GENERALLY

The Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act, by 50 U.S.C. § 525 (1982), applies to actions taken by the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Clyde R. Arcoren, Sr. v. Deputy Ass't Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations), 13 IBIA 307 (Oct. 29, 1985)

The Bureau of Indian Affairs has authority to interpret tribal law in order to determine the tribe's legitimate governing body.

Norman M. Crooks v. Area Director, Minneapolis Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 14 IBIA 181 (July 24, 1986)

The Bureau of Indian Affairs has the right to interpret tribal law in order to ensure that tribal action in which the Bureau has an interest is consistent with that law.

Alta Kane Rogers v. Acting Deputy Ass't Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations), 15 IBIA 13 (Oct. 16, 1986)

It is axiomatic that the Bureau of Indian Affairs has a responsibility to interpret Federal regulations in carrying out its duties under those regulations.

When the Bureau of Indian Affairs receives information suggesting that Federal regulations have been violated, it has an affirmative duty to inquire into the matter and take appropriate action to correct or end any violation found to exist.

BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS--ContinuedGENERALLY--Continued

The Bureau of Indian Affairs has authority to interpret tribal law in order to determine the tribe's legitimate governing body.

Susan Totenhagen v. Area Director, Minneapolis Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 15 IBIA 105 (Feb. 12, 1987)

Sec. 106(h) of the Indian Self-Determination Act, 25 U.S.C. § 450j(h) (1982), does not preclude the use of program funds to pay costs incurred by the Bureau of Indian Affairs in monitoring and providing technical assistance for a contract under the Act.

Confusion and potentially conflicting decisions would obviously result if two offices within the Department were to exercise simultaneous jurisdiction over the same persons and subject matter. Therefore, one of the two offices must be determined to have priority, in accordance with Departmental policy.

Bureau of Indian Affairs agency Superintendents are not empowered by 25 CFR 115.11(b) to authorize disbursements from the Individual Indian Money account of a deceased Indian for funeral expenses without the approval of an Administrative Law Judge (Indian Probate).

Menominee Tribal Enterprises v. Area Director, Minneapolis Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 15 IBIA 263 (Aug. 12, 1987)

28 U.S.C. § 516 (1982), vests the Department of Justice with authority to control the defense of litigation pending in the United States Claims Court. Bureau of Indian Affairs officials are without authority to override the decisions of Justice Department attorneys concerning conduct of the litigation.

Oglala Sioux Tribe v. Area Director, Aberdeen Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 16 IBIA 201 (Aug. 18, 1988)

The Department of the Interior has authority to interpret a tribal constitution with respect to the Secretary's ordinance approval role under the constitution.

The Secretary of the Interior may delegate to subordinate officials the authority to approve tribal ordinances granted to him in tribal constitutions.

Fort McDermitt Paiute Shoshone Tribe v. Acting Phoenix Area Director, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 17 IBIA 144 (June 21, 1989)

BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS--ContinuedADMINISTRATIVE APPEALSGenerally

Administrative appeals within the Bureau of Indian Affairs are normally decided by the Deputy Assistant Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations) under authority delegated from the Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs. If, however, the Assistant Secretary considers an appeal in place of the Deputy Assistant Secretary, he is subject to the 30-day period for decision set forth in 25 CFR 2.19.

Confusion would obviously result if two offices within the Department were to exercise simultaneous jurisdiction over the same persons and subject matter. Therefore, one of the two offices must be determined to have priority, in accordance with Departmental policy.

Interim Ad Hoc Committee of the Karok Tribe v. Area Director, Sacramento Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 13 IBIA 76 (Jan. 8, 1985) 92 I.D. 46

Field and area offices of the Bureau of Indian Affairs do not have authority to overturn decisions of the Deputy Assistant Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations).

Patricia Ann Schoolcraft Patencio v. Area Director, Sacramento Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 13 IBIA 150 (May 21, 1985)

Under 43 CFR 4.331, the Board of Indian Appeals does not have jurisdiction to review a matter when there has been no final decision by an appropriate official of the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Hawley Lake Homeowners' Ass'n v. Deputy Ass't Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations), 13 IBIA 276 (Oct. 10, 1985)

Upon the expiration of the 30-day time period for decision established by 25 CFR 2.19(b), the Board of Indian Appeals has jurisdiction over an appeal filed with the Deputy Assistant Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations). However, the Board will not act in the matter unless the appellant invokes the Board's jurisdiction by filing with the Board a separate notice of appeal and a motion to assume jurisdiction, or other document requesting Board jurisdiction. The original filing under 25 CFR 2.11(a) is insufficient to trigger the Board's jurisdiction automatically after the expiration of the time period.

Joe P. Sievers v. Deputy Ass't Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations), 13 IBIA 291 (Oct. 11, 1985)

Under the circumstances of this case, when an issue was raised by a party but not addressed by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Board of Indian Appeals will remand that issue for initial determination by the Bureau.

Oliver Redfield v. Area Director, Billings Area Office, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 13 IBIA 356 (Dec. 27, 1985)

The characterization of a decision rendered by the Deputy Assistant Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations) as discretionary is a legal conclusion subject to review by the Board of Indian Appeals.

Discretionary Decisions

When the official exercising the administrative review functions of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs fails to issue a decision within 30 days from the date an appeal was ripe for decision, the Board of Indian Appeals acquires jurisdiction under the terms of 25 CFR 2.19(b) without regard to whether the decision under review is based upon an exercise of discretion or an interpretation of law.

Under 43 CFR 4.337(b), the Board of Indian Appeals must refer to the Bureau of Indian Affairs official exercising the administrative review authority of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs those issues arising in an appeal before it that are committed to the Commissioner's discretion.

The role of the Board of Indian Appeals in reviewing a rental adjustment in a lease of Indian land is to determine whether the adjustment is reasonable, that is, whether it is supported by law and substantial evidence. If it is reasonable, the Board will not substitute its judgment for that of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, but the Board must overturn an adjustment that is not reasonable.

Frank Gamble v. Acting Deputy Ass't Secretary--Indian Affairs (Operations), 15 IBIA 101 (Feb. 5, 1987)

Falcon Lake Properties v. Ass't Secretary--Indian Affairs, 15 IBIA 286 (Sept. 29, 1987)

25 CFR 162.5(b)(2) vests the Secretary with discretion to approve the lease of tribal land to the Bureau of Indian Affairs, inter alia, at a nominal rental. In light of this regulatory provision, the decision whether the Bureau should pay fair market value to lease tribal land is committed to the Bureau's discretion. In reviewing such decisions, it is not the function of the Board of Indian Appeals to substitute its judgment for that of the Bureau. Rather, it is the Board's responsibility to ensure that proper consideration has been given to all legal prerequisites to the exercise of discretion.

BUREAU OF LAND MANAGEMENT
(See also Mineral Leasing Act--if included in this Index.)

When the Bureau of Land Management cites an oil and gas lessee for an incident of noncompliance for a safety violation, the failure to have a belt guard on a pumpjack, the Bureau of Land Management may not assess the lessee a penalty for noncompliance if the lessee, acting in good faith, has complied timely with the terms of the order and if the purpose of the order, ensuring safety, has been fulfilled. No penalty will be imposed where the cited "hazard" is so minimal that the risk of actual harm is virtually nonexistent.

Chinook Resources, Inc., 85 IBLA 5 (Jan. 30, 1985)

BLM may properly rely on public hearings conducted, and adopt past and future decisions rendered by a State board with respect to oil and gas conservation within Indian lands where BLM retains the ultimate jurisdiction to approve such decisions and, in fact, exercises an independent review function prior to such adoption.

Assiniboine & Sioux Tribes, 85 IBLA 39 (Feb. 5, 1985)

It is premature for the Bureau of Land Management to reject petition/applications for desert land entries merely on the basis of informal information and belief that the State water authority will probably deny the applicants the right to appropriate groundwater for irrigation of the entries where the water authority has taken no official action on the water applications pending before it.

Julie A. Peterson et al., 86 IBLA 118 (Apr. 15, 1985)

BLM has the authority to decide whether to issue a noncompetitive geothermal resources lease pursuant to sec. 3 of the Geothermal Steam Act of 1970, 30 U.S.C. § 1002 (1982), for land within a national forest where the Forest Service has consented to leasing, and to impose additional stipulations, in order to protect environmental resources, not inconsistent with those prescribed by the Forest Service. Where BLM has expressly not exercised that authority, the case will be remanded for that purpose, including a consideration of whether BLM has properly provided for staged leasing,

Sierra Club, Oregon Chapter, 87 IBLA 1 (May 17, 1985)

BLM has the authority to issue notices of incidents of noncompliance, e.g., for failure to regravel an access road and to remove reserve pit fluids, and to levy an assessment under 43 CFR 3163.3 (1983) with respect to the operation of oil and gas wells on Federal noncompetitive oil and gas leases within a national forest.

Where BLM has issued a decision which levied an assessment for noncompliance with a previous order with respect to the operation of oil and gas wells on noncompetitive oil and gas leases and has afforded the lessee a technical and procedural review in accordance with 43 CFR 3165.3, the decision of that official is binding.

Riviera Drilling & Exploration, 87 IBLA 357 (June 27, 1985)

When the Bureau of Land Management cites an oil and gas lessee for an incident of noncompliance with regulatory requirements, i.e., the failure to effectively seal a valve, the applicable regulation, 43 CFR 3163.3, requires that the Bureau of Land Management levy an assessment in the amount provided by the regulation.

Yates Energy Corp., 89 IBLA 150 (Oct. 4, 1985)

A decision by BLM denying a request to amend an existing resource management plan or a management framework plan is not subject to appeal to the Board of Land Appeals. Although this situation is not expressly covered by the terms of 43 CFR 1610.5-2(a) (which allows administrative review of approval or amendment of resource management plans only via protests to the Director of BLM, whose decision is final for the Department), logic dictates denial of a request for an amendment of such a plan must follow the same avenue of review. It is distinguishable from actions on applications following classification or decisions implementing a management plan or amendment, which are appealable to this Board.

Harold E. Carrasco, Ray W. Carrasco, 90 IBLA 39 (Dec. 10, 1985)

The Bureau of Land Management may properly issue a notice of an incident of noncompliance with 43 CFR 3162.4-3, requiring the filing of a monthly report of operations for each calendar month, beginning with the month in which drilling operations were initiated.

Somont Oil Co., Inc., 91 IBLA 137 (Mar. 24, 1986)

Failure to obtain written approval prior to initial drilling, plug-back, or recompletion drilling operations violates provisions both of 25 CFR 211.20 and 30 CFR 221.21(b) (1982). Whether a penalty should be assessed under provision of 25 CFR 211.22 or 30 CFR 221 requires interpretation of both the regulatory scheme and the oil and gas lease affected. Departmental regulations implementing the Indian Mineral Leasing Act are found to have specific and primary application in cases involving Indian lands leased for oil and gas.

Where a lessee of Indian lands commences drilling operations without written approval, penalties assessed must be reasonably related to the nature of the prohibited conduct. Maximum penalties should not be imposed if mitigating circumstances are present. Pursuant to provision of 25 CFR 211.22, the amount of penalty to be imposed is committed to the sound exercise of agency discretion.

Determination of the proper amount to be assessed as a penalty for violation of the provisions of 25 CFR subpart 211 is committed to the sound discretion of the agency and is governed by considerations of fairness applied to the individual facts of each violation.

The Bureau of Land Management may properly cite an oil and gas lessee for an incident of noncompliance with regulatory requirements upon a showing of a failure to effectively seal valves as required by 43 CFR 3162.7-4(b)(1).

Lycro Energy Corp., 92 IBLA 81 (May 27, 1986)

Hardy Salt Co., 96 IBLA 39 (Feb. 27, 1987)

Where lands described in a previously relinquished Native allotment application are patented to another, and the applicant requests reinstatement of the relinquished application, the Department has a duty to a Native allotment applicant to make a preliminary investigation and determination regarding whether the relinquishment was voluntary and knowing. If it was not, the application should be reinstated and, if deemed appropriate, the Department should pursue recovery of such lands. When a document stating an intent to relinquish a Native allotment application is suspect on its face, a petition for reinstatement of the application should not be denied until the authenticity of the relinquishment document is verified.

Matilda Titus, 92 IBLA 340 (June 30, 1986)

The BLM may properly cite an oil and gas lessee for an INC with regulatory requirements upon a showing of a failure to effectively seal a valve as required by 43 CFR 3162.7-4(b)(1).

Mingo Oil Producers, 94 IBLA 384 (Dec. 8, 1986)

Neither 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982) nor the regulations at 43 CFR 3833 require a mineral locator to submit proof of chain of title to BLM. The regulation at 43 CFR 3833.4 provides that failure to file information after notice from BLM as to a deficiency may lead to a determination that a claim is void, but application of the rule is explicitly limited to the information requirements of the regulatory provisions listed in the subsection. The regulatory procedure for dealing with curable defects applies only when information sought by BLM is required by regulation. It does not apply to other information BLM might believe would be useful to its administration of mining claim records so as to permit invalidation of a claim for reasons not enumerated by statute or regulation.

Add-Ventures, Ltd., 95 IBLA 44 (Dec. 19, 1986)

When subsequent to execution of a mineral material sales contract, the Department has amended the regulation providing for automatic termination of such a contract for failure to submit an in lieu of minimum annual production payment on or before the anniversary date by giving the authorized officer discretionary authority to terminate, the Board will set aside a BLM decision holding the contract to have automatically terminated and remand the case to BLM to allow the exercise of its discretion.

T. Brown Constructors, Inc., 95 IRLA 107 (Jan. 6, 1987)

The Bureau of Land Management has no authority to establish appeals procedures for the disposition of matters which are exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Board of Land Appeals, except by duly promulgated regulation.

When a notice of appeal is timely filed, the Bureau of Land Management loses jurisdiction over the case and has no further authority to take any action on the subject matter of the appeal. The relevant case files should then be transmitted to the Board of Land Appeals immediately.

BLM has the authority to determine whether a relinquishment of a Native allotment application was voluntary and knowing and not fraudulently procured in making a preliminary determination whether to recommend a suit to cancel a patent, which was issued to the State of Alaska after the relinquishment with respect to land originally covered by the allotment application. Where the applicant requests an oral hearing to present evidence on the validity of a relinquishment, the Board will order a hearing pursuant to 43 CFR 4.415, in which the State will be allowed to intervene.

Feodoria (Kallander) Pennington, 97 IBLA 350 (May 26, 1987)

A determination to not waive a breach of contract for sales of mineral materials will not be overturned absent a showing that the determination is arbitrary, capricious, or not in the best interest of the Federal Government.

T. Brown Constructors, Inc., 98 IBLA 1 (May 28, 1987)

The BLM may properly cite an oil and gas lessee for an incident of noncompliance with regulatory requirements upon a showing of a failure to effectively seal a valve as required by 43 CFR 3162.7(b)(1).

Mingo Oil Producers (On Reconsideration), 98 IBLA 133 (June 22, 1987)

BLM has a duty to exercise its authority over mining claims to the end that valid claims are recognized, invalid ones eliminated, and the rights of the public preserved. BLM may not issue a mineral patent until it has assured itself that the applicant holds a valid mining claim by virtue of compliance with all aspects of the mining laws.

Any party adversely affected by a decision of the Bureau of Land Management on an application for a permit to drill under 43 CFR 3162.3-1 may request administrative review by the State Director of the Bureau of Land Management in accordance with 43 CFR 3165.3(b). Any party adversely affected by the decision of the State Director under 43 CFR 3165.3(b) may appeal that decision to the Board of Land Appeals.

San Juan Citizens Alliance, 104 IBLA 288 (Sept. 14, 1988)

BLM may properly cite an oil and gas lessee for an incident of noncompliance with regulatory requirements upon a showing of a failure to effectively seal a valve as required by 43 CFR 3162.7-4.

GENERALLY

While the general Departmental policy is not to suspend oil and gas lease offers to await possible future leasing of lands, the policy is not without exception. Where circumstances warrant suspension and suspension is not precluded by 43 CFR 2091.1, oil and gas lease offers for acquired lands in the Nueces River Project under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Reclamation may be suspended until the Bureau of Reclamation has completed its oil and gas management plan for that area.

Robert J. Shorney, 88 IBLA 61 (July 22, 1985)

When lands are withdrawn from entry under some or all of the public land laws, the withdrawal remains in effect until there is a formal revocation or modification of the withdrawal. In this case, the transfer of administrative jurisdiction of previously withdrawn lands from the Department of the Interior to the Department of Agriculture pursuant to the authority granted by 16 U.S.C. § 4601-18(c) (1982) cannot be construed as a formal revocation or modification of the withdrawal opening the lands to mineral entry. The Department of the Interior retained jurisdiction to the extent necessary for the operation of the reclamation project and other reclamation purposes.

REIMBURSABILITY

A right-of-use may be granted to the Town of Grand Lake, Colorado, by the Bureau of Reclamation without fair market value reimbursement, pursuant to Departmental regulation 43 CFR 429.4, where a reasonable opportunity exists for the exchange of rights-of-use privileges and there exists a reciprocal agreement between the Bureau and the Town for the right-of-use privileges providing for such exchange.

GENERALLY

The jurisdiction of the Board of Land Appeals extends to appeals from decisions of Departmental officials regarding the disposition of minerals on public domain and acquired lands pursuant to statutory authority and the regulations promulgated thereunder. As a general rule, this Board has no authority to entertain a claim under the common law of contracts for damages for contract breach and an appeal to this Board predicated on such a ground is properly dismissed for lack of jurisdiction.

CLASSIFICATION AND MULTIPLE USE ACT OF 1964

Mining claims located on land which has been segregated from appropriation under the mining laws by publication in the Federal Register of a notice of classification under the Classification and Multiple Use Act of 1964 are properly declared null and void ab initio. A subsequent modification or revocation of the classification order will not retroactively validate locations made while the lands were segregated from mineral entry.

COAL LEASES AND PERMITS

GENERALLY

Where a bidder at a competitive coal lease sale clearly has notice of the deferred bonus payment schedule required of the lessee, it accepts that schedule by submitting a bid. The failure of BLM to include the payment schedule in the lease does not foreclose BLM from amending the lease to include the payment schedule.

Abston Construction Co., Inc., 89 IBLA 202 (Oct. 22, 1985)

Advance royalty provisions in a lease issued in 1975 under the Department's short-term coal leasing criteria were not modified by regulations promulgated in 1976 implementing the Federal Coal Leasing Amendments Act that governed the imposition of advance royalties. Where the lease made explicit provisions for how and when advance royalties were to be paid, and nothing in the regulations indicated an intent to modify the express lease terms, the lease terms were unaffected by promulgation of the regulations.

Cyprus Western Coal Co., 103 IBLA 218 (July 26, 1988)

Under 43 CFR 3453.3-1(a) and 3472.1-2(e)(1), 10 years from which they were not producing the coal deposits in commercial quantities, in the absence of extraordinary circumstances concerning the failure to produce coal on this lease, BLM is prohibited from approving an assignment transferring an interest in any existing Federal coal lease to them. Under 43 CFR 3472.1-2(e)(1)(ii), an entity seeking to obtain approval of a transfer must qualify on the date the transfer is disapproved. Where the parties did not qualify for the assignment at the time BLM considered their application for approval of assignment, BLM properly disapproves the application.

The requirement that a coal lease be "diligently developed" on pain of termination is not equivalent to the restriction imposed by 43 CFR 3472.1-2(e)(1)(i) on transfer of lease interests to lessees with other Federal coal leases that they have held in excess of 10 years without producing the coal deposits "in commercial quantities." It is irrelevant to the application of 43 CFR 3472.1-2(e)(1)(i) when and whether the holders of a lease not producing coal deposits in commercial quantities might also be required to accomplish "diligent development" of that lease.

The Board of Land Appeals has no authority to declare invalid duly promulgated regulations of the Department; such regulations have the force and effect of law and are binding on the Department. Sec. 3472.1-2(e) of 43 CFR was "duly promulgated" and, accordingly, has binding force and effect of law. Further, this provision is amply authorized by relevant provisions of the Mineral Leasing Act.

The intent of the proviso in a Federal coal lease that it is "pursuant and subject to the terms and provisions of the [Mineral Leasing Act], and to all reasonable regulations of the Secretary of the Interior, now or hereafter in force which are made a part hereof" is to incorporate future regulations, even though inconsistent with those in effect at the time of execution of the lease under the Mineral Leasing Act, and even though to do so creates additional obligation or burdens for the lessee. The implementation of the burden imposed by 43 CFR 3472.1-2(e)(1)(i) is consistent with the enforcement of the congressionally imposed obligation to develop Federal coal leases.

Veola & Aaron Rasmussen, 109 IBLA 106 (June 7, 1989)

BLM properly increases the bond for a coal lease in accordance with appropriate Departmental guidelines where the lease goes from a nonproducing to a producing status, regardless of whether such production constitutes full development of the leased land.

United States Fuel Co., 109 IBLA 398 (June 27, 1989)

The Board of Land Appeals has no authority to declare invalid duly promulgated regulations of this Department. Such regulations have the force and effect of law and are binding on the Department.

If the record contains conflicting BLM calculations of recoverable coal reserves existing on the lease at the time the lease became subject to the due diligence requirement, and BLM has failed to explain its decision to use an earlier, higher estimate of recoverable reserves rather than a subsequent, lower estimate for calculating the production rate necessary to satisfy the continued operation requirement, BLM's calculations will be set aside, and the case will be remanded for further consideration of the recoverable coal reserves estimate.

AMCA Coal Leasing, Inc., 112 IBLA 103 (Nov. 29, 1989)

COAL LEASES AND PERMITS--ContinuedAPPLICATIONS

A BLM decision holding a coal lease application for rejection which requires the filing of certain information within 30 days of receipt of the decision, failing in which the application will be rejected without further notice, is interlocutory and the 30-day period for filing a notice of appeal does not commence until expiration of the time for compliance. A notice of appeal filed within the compliance period is actually an objection to action proposed to be taken and, thus, is a protest.

When one files a coal lease application citing the leasing on application regulations in 43 CFR Subpart 3425, but in a subsequent submission declares that he will be using the coal for domestic energy needs, a conflict arises because one seeking coal for such a use must acquire a license to mine in accordance with 43 CFR Subpart 3440.

Randall J. Gerlach, 90 IBLA 338 (Feb. 26, 1986)

"Last address of record." In the processing of an application for assignment of a coal lease, the last address of record for the purposes of 43 CFR 1810.2(b) is the address stated on the application unless the applicant or an authorized representative has filed written notice of a change of address. When an application is accompanied by a letter from the applicant's attorney which states that the attorney is to be contacted concerning certain matters, the attorney's address is the "last address of record," and delivery of a document to that address constitutes service of the document upon the applicant, regardless of whether it was actually received by the attorney. Where the address provided by the attorney does not specify a suite, office number, or floor, "delivery" of the document is accomplished when it is received in the building indicated in the address.

COAL LEASES AND PERMITS--ContinuedASSIGNMENTS AND TRANSFERS

Where BLM has approved the assignment of a record title interest in an Alaskan coal lease at a time when the lease account is not in good standing, the assignment is not void but voidable at the discretion of BLM. If the assignment has not been voided by BLM, it remains in effect and binds the assignees.

The assignee of the record title interest in an Alaskan coal lease effectively agrees to assume the obligations of the lessee upon acceptance, with BLM's approval of an assignment of such interest and, thus, becomes obligated to pay any unpaid rental and royalty and the costs of reclaiming the minesite, even where these accrued or arose prior to the assignment.

Alaska Statebank, The Travelers Indemnity Co., 111 IBLA 300 (Oct. 27, 1989)

CANCELLATION

Bureau of Land Management may not cancel a competitive coal lease by administrative action, but must institute an appropriate judicial proceeding under 30 U.S.C. § 188(a) (1982) where, subsequent to lease issuance, the lessee failed to pay timely an installment of the deferred bonus bid, and the annual rental as required by the lease which failure constituted cause for cancellation.

DILIGENCE

If a coal lease issued prior to Aug. 4, 1976 is not producing but is in compliance with its lease diligence obligations, the sec. 2(a)(2)(A) leasing prohibition will nonetheless attach to the holder of the nonproducing coal lease.

The sec. 2(a)(2)(A) leasing prohibition does not arise when advance royalties are being paid in lieu of production under sec. 7(b) of the Mineral Leasing Act, 30 U.S.C. § 207(b), continued operation obligation, and when production is not occurring because of force majeure.

The sec. 2(a)(2)(A) leasing prohibition does not attach to the holder of a nonproducing coal lease that is included in a producing logical mining unit approved under sec. 2(d) of the Mineral Leasing Act, 30 U.S.C. § 202a.

Sec. 2(a)(2)(A) of the Mineral Leasing Act of 1920, M-36951 (Feb. 12, 1985) 92 I.D. 537

Sec. 6 of the Federal Coal Leasing Amendments Act of 1976, 30 U.S.C. § 207 (1982), requires that any coal lease not producing in commercial quantities at the end of 10 years be terminated. No suspension of this obligation to commence production is authorized by statute or regulation.

Mountain States Resources Corp., 92 IBLA 184 (June 12, 1986) 93 I.D. 239

The requirement in sec. 7(a) of the Mineral Leasing Act, 30 U.S.C. § 207(a), that a coal lease must be producing coal in commercial quantities by the end of the tenth lease year or else the lease will terminate is part of the "term" of the coal lease that is extended by the period of a suspension of operations and production in the interest of conservation under sec. 39 of the Mineral Leasing Act, 30 U.S.C. § 209.

Nothing in the legislative history of the Federal Coal Leasing Amendments Act of 1976 suggests that Congress intended to preclude the extension of the 10-year production period added to sec. 7(a) of the Mineral Leasing Act, 30 U.S.C. § 207(a), by the period of a suspension of operations and production in the interest of conservation under sec. 39 of the Mineral Leasing Act, 30 U.S.C. § 209.

reached a conclusion concerning the effect of a suspension of operations and production under sec. 39 of the Mineral Leasing Act, 30 U.S.C. § 209, on the 10-year production period in sec. 7(a) of the Act, 30 U.S.C. § 207(a), which is the opposite of the conclusion expressed both in the preamble to the 1979 coal management regulations and in the 1981 proposed coal lease operations regulations. An amendment to 43 CFR 3483.3(b)(1) (1987), to restore the original 1979 interpretation is fully supported by the law.

As the Interior Board of Land Appeals held in Mountain States Resources Corp., 92 IBLA 184, 93 I.D. 239 (1986), market conditions neither form the basis for suspension of a coal lease nor will they prevent a lease from termination under sec. 7(a) of the Mineral Leasing Act, 30 U.S.C. § 207(a), for failure to produce coal in commercial quantities.

Suspensions of Operations & Production for Coal Leases Under Sec. 39 of the Mineral Leasing Act, M-36958 (July 14, 1988) 96 I.D. 15

Sec. 5 of the Federal Coal Leasing Amendments Act of 1976, 30 U.S.C. § 207 (1982), requires that any coal lease not producing in commercial quantities at the end of 10 years be terminated. No suspension of this obligation to commence production is authorized by statute or regulation, and BLM properly terminates a lease on which there has been no production during the 10-year diligent development period.

Mountain States Resources Corp., 111 IBLA 160 (Oct. 4, 1989)

"Not permissible." As used in 43 CFR 3480.0-5(a)(23), the exclusion of other areas where mining is "not permissible" from the minable reserve base does not encompass areas in which no permit has been obtained, absent a showing that no permit can be obtained.

Where the applicable policy directive provides that a 40-percent recovery factor will be applied for multiple seam mining, application of a 50-percent factor will be reversed absent a showing that, under the specific facts of record, the higher recovery rate could be reasonably predicted.

LEASES

There are several lawful ways to define the statutory phrase "producing . . . in commercial quantities," contained in sec. 2(a)(2)(A) of the Mineral Leasing Act, 30 U.S.C. § 201(a)(2)(A). The Secretary has discretionary authority to administratively define the phrase.

The prohibition against the issuance of new leases created by sec. 2(a)(2)(A) of the Mineral Leasing Act, 30 U.S.C. § 201(a)(2)(A), extends to all mineral leases issued under the Mineral Leasing Act, not merely to coal leases.

If a coal lease issued prior to Aug. 4, 1976 is not producing but is in compliance with its lease diligence obligations, the sec. 2(a)(2)(A) leasing prohibition will nonetheless attach to the holder of the nonproducing coal lease.

production under sec. 7(b) of the Mineral Leasing Act, 30 U.S.C. § 207(b), continued operation obligation, and when production is not occurring because of force majeure.

Production during the 10-year holding period does not toll the running of the 10-year holding period of sec. 2(a)(2)(A).

The sec. 2(a)(2)(A) leasing prohibition does not attach to the holder of a coal lease that is not producing because production has been suspended under sec. 39 of the Mineral Leasing Act, 30 U.S.C. § 209.

The sec. 2(a)(2)(A) leasing prohibition does not attach to the holder of a nonproducing coal lease that is included in a producing logical mining unit approved under sec. 2(d) of the Mineral Leasing Act, 30 U.S.C. § 202a.

Upon approval of a coal lease assignment, a new 10-year holding period starts for the assignee, and the assignor of the nonproducing coal lease is no longer penalized by the lease's nonproducing status.

Sec. 2(a)(2)(A) does not prohibit an entity which is disqualified from lease issuance from acquiring a lease by assignment.

Under sec. 30 of the Mineral Leasing Act, 30 U.S.C. § 187, the Secretary has discretionary authority to prohibit coal lease assignments holding nonproducing leases for 10 years more.

The Secretary lacks authority to disapprove a relinquishment of a nonproducing coal lease for the sole reason the lessee has not produced coal in 10 years or more.

The sec. 2(a)(2)(A) leasing prohibition runs to all entities "controlled by or under common control" with the holder of a nonproducing lease.

Pursuant to 30 U.S.C. § 207(a) (1982) and 43 CFR Subpart 3451, the Secretary is vested with broad discretionary authority to readjust every term or condition of a coal lease. A lessee of a pre-federal Coal Leasing Amendments Act lease has no vested rights to the indefinite continuation of existing lease terms.

Where a notice of intent to readjust a coal lease is given to a lessee prior to expiration of the period allowed for readjustment, such notice satisfies the statutory requirements, and the Bureau of Land Management may subsequently provide the specific terms or conditions for readjustment.

The Federal Coal Leasing Amendments Act, 30 U.S.C. §§ 201-209 (1982), governs the terms and conditions that the Department may impose upon readjustment of leases issued prior to the Act.

A decision by the Bureau of Land Management to readjust a coal lease will be affirmed where the readjusted provisions appealed by the lessee are mandated by statute or regulation, or where such provisions are in accordance with proper administration of the public lands.

A decision by the Bureau of Land Management to readjust a coal lease will be affirmed where the readjusted provisions appealed by the lessee are mandated by statute or regulation, or where such provisions are in accordance with proper administration of the public lands.

A provision in a readjusted coal lease requiring the lessee to conduct operations so as to avoid or, where avoidance is impracticable, to minimize and, where practicable, to repair, damage to Federal forage and timber, improvements including crops, of a surface owner, and improvements owned by the United States or by its permittees, licensees, or lessees, is appropriate and properly included in a lease readjustment.

It is proper to include a provision in a readjusted coal lease which reserves to the United States the right to authorize other uses of the leased lands that do not unreasonably interfere with the exploration and mining operations of the lessee, since any authorized use would be subject to the lease.

It is proper to include in a readjusted coal lease a provision requiring the lessee to conduct at its own expense a survey and inventory of archaeological and paleontological values prior to approval of a mining plan or any activity that would disturb the surface of the land.

A Federal coal lease which is subject to readjustment subsequent to enactment of the Federal Coal Leasing Amendments Act, 30 U.S.C. §§ 201-209 (1982), will be conformed upon readjustment to the terms required by that statute.

Regulation 43 CFR 3451.1(c)(1) specifically provides that a notice of readjustment or notice of intent to readjust must be given to the lessee at or before the expiration of the initial 20-year period for leases issued prior to Aug. 4, 1976. Where BLM fails to provide such notice to a lessee holding a 50-percent undivided interest in a lease and the record indicates the lessee did not have actual knowledge of BLM's intent to readjust on or before the anniversary date of the lease, the lease may not be readjusted.

Where a notice of intent to readjust a coal lease is given to a lessee prior to expiration of the period allowed for readjustment, such notice satisfies the statutory requirements, and the Bureau of Land Management may subsequently provide the specific terms or conditions for readjustment.

The Secretary is vested with broad discretionary authority to readjust every term or condition of a coal lease. A lessee of a pre-Federal Coal Leasing Amendments Act lease has no vested rights to the indefinite continuation of existing lease terms. Terms and conditions which are mandated by statute and regulation or are necessary for proper administration of public lands must be included in a readjusted lease.

The Federal Coal Leasing Amendments Act, 30 U.S.C. §§ 201-209 (1982), governs the terms and conditions that the Department may impose upon readjustment of leases issued prior to the Act.

A decision by the Bureau of Land Management to readjust a coal lease will be affirmed where the readjusted provisions appealed by the lessee are mandated by statute or regulation, or where such provisions are in accordance with proper administration of the public lands.

"Transmit." Regulation 43 CFR 3451.1(c)(2) provides that BLM waives its right to readjust a coal lease if it fails to "transmit" the lease terms within 2 years of the notice of intent to readjust the lease. "Transmit," as used in this regulation, means "to send." Therefore, where BLM deposits the proposed readjusted lease terms in the mail within 2 years of the notice, BLM may readjust the lease, even when the proposed lease terms are received by the lessee more than 2 years after the notice.

BLM is not barred from readjusting all the terms and conditions of a coal lease issued prior to enactment of the Federal Coal Leasing Amendments Act of 1976, 30 U.S.C. § 201-209 (1982), in accordance with the requirements of the statute and its implementing regulations, where a notice of intent to readjust is given prior to the end of the 20-year primary term of the lease.

In accordance with 30 U.S.C. § 207(a) (1982), the Secretary has determined by regulation that royalty for coal mined will be not less than 12-1/2 percent of the value of coal removed from a surface mine and not less than 8 percent of the value of coal removed from an underground mine. However, the authorized officer may determine a lesser amount is appropriate for an underground mine, but in no case less than 5 percent. In addition, the Secretary may, in accordance with 43 CFR 3473.3-2(d), reduce the royalty obligation for any mine.

Kanawha & Hocking Coal & Coke Co., 93 IBLA 179 (Aug. 15, 1986)

Where BLM sends a Federal coal lessee a notice of readjustment stating that its lease will, in fact, be readjusted and that the terms and conditions of readjustment will be forwarded within 2 years of receipt of the notice, the lessee may protest that notice and an appeal will lie from a decision denying that protest because the lessee is a party to a case who has been adversely affected by BLM's decision.

For purposes of coal lease readjustment periods, any coal lease issued prior to enactment of the Federal Coal Leasing Amendments Act of Aug. 4, 1976, 30 U.S.C. §§ 201, 209 (1982), whose 20-year readjustment period expires after Aug. 4, 1976, is automatically converted at that time to a 10-year readjustment interval. Failure to provide timely notice of readjustment means that the Department waives the right to impose any other new terms and conditions on the lease until the end of the next 10-year readjustment period.

Franklin Real Estate Co., 93 IBLA 272 (Aug. 29, 1986)

Under 30 U.S.C. § 209 (1982), BLM is authorized to reduce the royalty for a coal lease below the minimum specified by statute whenever it is necessary to do so in order to promote development, or whenever the lease cannot be successfully operated under the terms provided therein.

The provisions of 30 U.S.C. § 209 (1982) specify no circumstance in which BLM is required to reduce the royalty of a coal lease. Under that statute, no entitlement to a reduction can ever arise. BLM remains free to accept the economic consequences of denying a reduction. The discretionary authority conferred by sec. 209 enables BLM to exercise prudent business judgment to select the alternative which best protects the economic interest of the United States as owner of the mineral resource.

The "bonus royalty" bid received in a competitive coal lease sale is properly considered a component of fair market value which the Secretary is required to obtain by terms of statute, 30 U.S.C. § 201(a)(1) (1982), and, hence, there is no authority for reduction of that "bonus royalty" just as there is no authority for refund of a "cash bonus" from a lease sale. However, where protection of the interests of the United States requires a reduction in royalty to ensure successful operation of a lease, 30 U.S.C. § 209 (1982) authorizes reduction of the statutory minimum component of the royalty.

When a coal lessee applies for a royalty reduction under 30 U.S.C. § 209 (1982), BLM cannot disregard the fact that the lessee's contracts with its customers provide for passing the royalty through to them. This fact is relevant to a determination of the necessity for royalty relief and must be considered if BLM is not to overstep the authority conferred by 30 U.S.C. § 209 (1982).

A decision by the Bureau of Land Management rejecting an exchange proposal submitted under that Act will be vacated when it fails to undertake the public interest determination required by both the regulations at 43 CFR 3435.2(c) and by the terms of an agreement entered into between the coal lessee and the Government.

In accordance with 30 U.S.C. § 207(a) (1982) for readjusted lease terms will provide that royalty for coal mined will be not less than 12-1/2 percent of the value of coal removed from a surface mine. Pursuant to 43 CFR 3473.3-2(a)(3), royalty for coal removed by underground methods will be 8 percent unless the lessee establishes that conditions warrant a lower amount, but in no case shall the lease term provide for less than 5-percent royalty for coal removed by underground operations. In the absence of either ongoing underground mining operations or a pending resource recovery and protection plan which contemplates underground operations, a lessee cannot establish that conditions warrant the imposition of less than an 8-percent royalty as a readjusted term.

The decisions of the Board of Land Appeals are final for the Department upon issuance. Thus, absent affirmative action by a Federal Court, a decision of a State Office directing an increase in bonding levels based on increased rental and royalty rates under readjusted lease terms which have been approved by the Board will be affirmed, even though the decision readjusting the rental and royalty rates is the subject of a suit for judicial review.

Although a failure to provide timely notice of readjustment at the end of a 20-year period is treated as a Departmental waiver of its right to impose new or additional terms and conditions, this waiver does not extend to the period between readjustments set by the Act, and a lease may be readjusted at the end of the next 10-year readjustment period.

When BLM gives a notice of intent to readjust a coal lease to the lessee prior to the 20-year lease anniversary date, the notice satisfies the statutory requirement for timely readjustment and BLM may, within the time provided in 43 CFR 3451.1, subsequently provide the specific terms and conditions for readjustment.

The Federal Coal Leasing Amendments Act, 30 U.S.C. §§ 201-209 (1982), governs the terms and conditions that the Department may impose upon readjustment of leases issued prior to that Act. All terms and conditions of the lease are subject to readjustment.

BLM's decision to readjust a coal lease will be affirmed where the readjusted provisions appealed by the lessee are mandated by statute or regulation or where such provisions are in accordance with the proper administration of the public lands.

In accordance with 30 U.S.C. § 207(a) (1982), the Secretary has determined by regulation that the royalty for coal mined will be not less than 12-1/2 percent of the value of coal removed from a surface mine and not less than 8 percent of the value of coal removed from an underground mine. However, the authorized officer may determine a lesser amount is appropriate for an underground mine, but in no case less than 5 percent. In addition, the Secretary may, in accordance with 43 CFR 3473.3-2(d), reduce the royalty obligation.

Coastal States Energy Co. et al., 94 IBLA 352 (Dec. 1, 1986)

The Board of Land Appeals will not reverse as unreasonable a readjustment of a coal lease to establish a 12-1/2-percent production royalty on the value of coal produced by strip or auger methods, since the lessee may seek further rate relief under 30 U.S.C. § 209 (1982), if needed.

Ark Land Co. (On Reconsideration), 96 IBLA 140 (Mar. 11, 1987)

BLM is not barred from readjusting all the terms and conditions of a coal lease issued prior to enactment of the Federal Coal Leasing Amendments Act of 1976, 30 U.S.C. §§ 201-209 (1982), in accordance with the requirements of the statute and its implementing regulations, where a notice of intent to readjust is given prior to the end of the 20-year primary term of the lease.

Where stipulations included in a readjusted coal lease do not recognize the extent to which a lessee has already conducted activities on the leased lands, those stipulations must be amended to clarify the extent to which appellant's existing operations are affected and to ensure that mere acceptance does not constitute a violation.

Kerr-McGee Coal Corp., 96 IBLA 280 (Mar. 26, 1987)

When BLM gives a notice of intent to readjust a coal lease to the lessee prior to the 20-year lease anniversary date, the notice satisfies the statutory requirement for timely readjustment and BLM may, within the time provided in 43 CFR 3451.1, subsequently provide the specific terms and conditions for readjustment.

The Federal Coal Leasing Amendments Act, 30 U.S.C. §§ 201-209 (1982), governs the terms and conditions that the Department may impose upon readjustment of leases issued prior to that Act. All terms and conditions of the lease are subject to readjustment.

BLM's decision to readjust a coal lease will be affirmed where the readjusted provisions challenged by the lessee are mandated by statute or regulation or where such provisions are in accordance with the proper administration of the public lands.

In accordance with 30 U.S.C. § 207(a) (1982) readjusted lease terms will provide that royalty for coal mined will be not less than 12-1/2 percent of the value of coal removed from a surface mine. Pursuant to 43 CFR 3473.3-2(a)(3), royalty for coal removed by underground methods will be 8 percent unless the lessee establishes that conditions warrant a lower amount, but in no case shall the lease term provide for less than 5-percent royalty for coal removed by underground operations. In the absence of either ongoing underground mining operations or a pending resource recovery and protection plan which contemplates underground operations, a lessee cannot establish that conditions warrant the imposition of less than an 8-percent royalty as a readjusted term.

The decisions of the Board of Land Appeals are final for the Department upon issuance. Thus, absent affirmative action by a Federal Court, a decision of a State Office directing an increase in bonding levels based on increased rental and royalty rates under readjusted lease terms which have been approved by the Board will be affirmed, even though the decision readjusting the rental and royalty rates is the subject of a suit for judicial review.

Notice of intent to readjust a coal lease given to a lessee prior to expiration of the period allowed for readjustment is effective to permit readjustment, even though BLM does not provide the specific terms or conditions for readjustment until after the expiration of the period.

If, based on information obtainable from the results of operations or from information available in a resource recovery and reclamation plan, it can be established that conditions warrant doing so, the authorized officer may set a royalty rate for an underground mine at less than 8 percent but not less than 5 percent.

Western Fuels-Utah, Inc., 98 IBLA 114 (June 16, 1987)

Readjustment of a coal lease is not timely where, prior to the end of the second 20-year period of the lease in 1974, BLM gave the lessee notice of BLM's intention to readjust the lease, but thereafter ensued a 5-year delay in furnishing appellant the proposed lease terms and an additional 6-year delay in responding to appellant's objections to the proposed lease terms.

The Federal Coal Leasing Amendments Act, 30 U.S.C. §§ 201-209 (1982), governs the terms and conditions the Department may impose upon readjustment of leases issued prior to that Act. All terms and conditions of the lease are subject to readjustment.

Where the Forest Service issues a decision determining that certain special stipulations should be included in a readjusted coal lease on National Forest lands and provides the right to appeal that decision through the Forest Service appeals procedures in 36 CFR 211.18, that review procedure must be utilized to challenge directly the special stipulations.

In accordance with 43 CFR 3473.3-2(a)(3), the BLM authorized officer may, if conditions warrant, set a royalty rate of less than 8 percent, but not less than 5 percent, for coal removed from an underground mine. However, where BLM has established an 8-percent royalty rate, and, on appeal, the lessee argues that conditions warrant a lesser rate, the Board need not remand for a determination by BLM, but will affirm, where the record shows the lease is nonproducing and no production is expected in the near future.

In accordance with Coastal States Energy Co. v. Hodel, 816 F.2d 502 (10th Cir. 1987), it is error for BLM, in readjusting a coal lease for an active underground coal mine, to set a royalty rate of 8 percent for coal removed from such mine without first determining if conditions warrant a lower rate.

For purposes of coal lease readjustment periods, any coal lease issued prior to enactment of sec. 6 of the Federal Coal Leasing Amendments Act of 1976, codified at 30 U.S.C. § 207 (1982), whose 20-year readjustment period expires after Aug. 4, 1976, is automatically converted at that time to a 10-year readjustment period.

BLM may incorporate language in a readjusted coal lease which makes termination of liability under the lease bond contingent on reclamation of all lands the surface of which has been disturbed, including land within a permit area, where Departmental regulations allow BLM, on its own or at the lessee's instigation, to release liability under the bond to the extent it covers reclamation obligations within a permit area.

The 20-year readjustment interval stated in coal leases issued prior to enactment of the Federal Coal Leasing Amendments Act of Aug. 4, 1976, 30 U.S.C. §§ 201, 209 (1982), was converted to a 10-year readjustment interval by that Act. Although a failure to provide timely notice of readjustment at the end of a 20-year period is treated as a Departmental waiver of its right to impose new or additional terms and conditions, this waiver does not extend to the period between readjustments set by the Act, and a lease may be readjusted at the end of the next 10-year readjustment period.

Wyodak Resources Development Corp., 106 IBLA 339 (Jan. 12, 1989)

Employees of the executive branch, including BLM, have no authority to depart from the requirements of statutes dealing with public lands. All citizens are deemed to have knowledge of such statutes. Thus, even though a coal lessee was erroneously advised by BLM that his coal lease would be subject to readjustment in 1999 rather than in 1989, the Government is not estopped from readjusting the lease in 1989 as provided by statute.

lease that cannot be successfully operated under the lease terms.

Under 30 U.S.C. § 209 (1982), BLM is authorized to reduce the royalty for a coal lease below the minimum specified by statute whenever it is necessary to do so in order to promote development, or whenever the lease cannot be successfully operated under the terms provided therein.

The provisions of 30 U.S.C. § 209 (1982) specify no circumstance in which BLM is required to reduce the royalty of a coal lease. Under that statute, no entitlement to a reduction can ever arise. BLM remains free to accept the economic consequences of denying a reduction. The discretionary authority conferred by sec. 209 enables BLM to exercise prudent business judgment to select the alternative which best protects the economic interest of the United States as owner of the mineral resource.

The "bonus royalty" bid received in a competitive coal lease sale is properly considered a component of fair market value which the Secretary is required to obtain by terms of statute, 30 U.S.C. § 201(a)(1) (1982), and, hence, there is no authority for reduction of that "bonus royalty" just as there is no authority for refund of a "cash bonus" from a lease sale. However, where protection of the interests of the United States requires a reduction in royalty to ensure successful operation of a lease, 30 U.S.C. § 209 (1982) authorizes reduction of the statutory minimum component of the royalty.

When a coal lessee applies for a royalty reduction under 30 U.S.C. § 209 (1982), BLM cannot disregard the fact that the lessee's contracts with its customers provide for passing the royalty through to them. This fact is relevant to a determination of the necessity for royalty relief and must be considered if BLM is not to overstep the authority conferred by 30 U.S.C. § 209 (1982).

Royalties, production and severance taxes, black lung taxes, and reclamation fees are properly considered to be elements of the costs of mining and, as such, no part of these expenses will be allowed to be deducted from value for royalty computation purposes as an indirect cost of transportation or processing.

SUSPENSION OF OPERATIONS AND PRODUCTION

Sec. 6 of the Federal Coal Leasing Amendments Act of 1976, 30 U.S.C. § 207 (1982), requires that any coal lease not producing in commercial quantities at the end of 10 years be terminated. No suspension of this obligation to commence production is authorized by statute or regulation.

Mountain States Resources Corp., 92 IBLA 184 (June 12, 1986)

When the Secretary directs or consents to a suspension of operations and production in the interest of conservation under sec. 39 of the Mineral Leasing Act, 30 U.S.C. § 209, the lessee is denied all beneficial use of the lease, including production. "Beneficial use" refers to all operations under the lease except for those necessary to maintain or preserve the well or mine workings, to conduct reclamation work or to protect the leased lands, natural resources, or public health and safety.

Congress provided two forms of relief when the Secretary directs or assents to a suspension of operations and production in the interest of conservation under sec. 39 of the Mineral Leasing Act, 30 U.S.C. § 209 - extension of the "term" by the period of suspension and elimination of annual rent during the suspension.

"Term." The term of a lease issued pursuant to the Mineral Leasing Act, when used without limitation as in sec. 39 of the Mineral Leasing Act, 30 U.S.C. § 209, includes all periods of time between the effective date and the expiration date and means the entire estate demised by the lease.

A suspension of operations and production in the interest of conservation under sec. 39 of the Mineral Leasing Act, 30 U.S.C. § 209, is clearly a relief provision and must be liberally construed. By extending the term of the lease by the period of the suspension, Congress intended that the lessee should have exactly the same contract with exactly the same term but with a later maturity date.

The requirement in sec. 7(a) of the Mineral Leasing Act, 30 U.S.C. § 207(a), that a coal lease must be producing coal in commercial quantities by the end of the tenth lease year or else the lease will terminate is part of the "term" of the coal lease that is extended by the period of a suspension of operations and production in the interest of conservation under sec. 39 of the Mineral Leasing Act, 30 U.S.C. § 209.

Nothing in the legislative history of the Federal Coal Leasing Amendments Act of 1976 suggests that Congress intended to preclude the extension of the 10-year production period added to sec. 7(a) of the Mineral Leasing Act, 30 U.S.C. § 207(a), by the period of a suspension of operations and production in the interest of conservation under sec. 39 of the Mineral Leasing Act, 30 U.S.C. § 209.

The preamble to the 1982 coal lease operations regulations contains no explanation why the Department reached a conclusion concerning the effect of a suspension of operations and production under sec. 39 of the Mineral Leasing Act, 30 U.S.C. § 209, on the 10-year production period in sec. 7(a) of the Act, 30 U.S.C. § 207(a), which is the opposite of the conclusion expressed both in the preamble to the 1979 coal management regulations and in the 1981 proposed coal lease operations regulations. An amendment to 43 CFR 3483.3(b)(1) (1987), to restore the original 1979 interpretation is fully supported by the law.

As the Interior Board of Land Appeals held in Mountain States Resources Corp., 92 IBLA 184, 93 I.D. 239 (1986), market conditions neither form the basis for suspension of a coal lease nor will they prevent a lease from termination under sec. 7(a) of the Mineral Leasing Act, 30 U.S.C. § 207(a), for failure to produce coal in commercial quantities.

Sec. 5 of the Federal Coal Leasing Amendments Act of 1976, 30 U.S.C. § 207 (1982), requires that any coal lease not producing in commercial quantities at the end of 10 years be terminated. William B. Torgramsen, Rosemary Ludvick v. Heirs & devisees of Carl G. Carlson, 96 IBLA 209 (Mar. 19, 1987)

The Department cannot grant a color-of-title application for land that was patented and is no longer public land.

One who files a class 2 color-of-title application is required by 43 U.S.C. § 1068(b) (1982) to establish, inter alia, that the tract applied for has been held in good faith and in peaceful, adverse, possession by the claimant, his ancestors or grantors, under claim or color of title for a period commencing not later than Jan. 1, 1901, to the date of application during which time they have paid taxes levied on the land by state and local governmental units. The statute does not give BLM the authority to grant a class 2 application where there is no evidence the lands applied for were included in lands conveyed to the applicants.

BLM may properly require an applicant under sec. 1 of the Color of Title Act, as amended, of his 43 U.S.C. § 1068 (1982), to publish a notice of his application, in accordance with 43 CFR 2541.5, regardless of any prior publication pursuant to state law in connection with a tax sale of the property sought.

Robert E. Richards, 98 IBLA 153 (June 23, 1987)

Although equitable title to land claimed under a class I color-of-title application filed pursuant to 43 U.S.C. § 1068 (1982), vests upon compliance with the statutory requirements coupled with the filing of an application with BLM, this does not establish a right in the applicant to the proceeds accruing from oil and gas development subsequent to the application and prior to issuance of patent.

Albert M. Lipscomb, 99 IBLA 217 (Oct. 15, 1987)

An applicant who believes or has reason to believe that title to land is in the United States at the time when the applicant acquires title to the land has not established the good faith necessary to support a color-of-title claim.

Patti L. Keith, 100 IBLA 89 (Nov. 30, 1987)

An application for a patent under the Act of Aug. 24, 1954, commonly known as the O'Konski Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1221 (1982), must be remanded to BLM where the applicants claim to have fully complied with the 1954 Act, but where their application was rejected for failure to comply with provisions of another statute, the Act of Dec. 22, 1928, the Color of Title Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1068 (1982).

COLOR OR CLAIM OF TITLE--ContinuedGENERALLY--Continued

Equitable title to land claimed under a class 1 color-of-title application filed pursuant to 43 U.S.C. § 1068 (1982), vests only upon the filing of the application by a qualified applicant. A patent for such land cannot be issued if outstanding, unpatented mining claims existed on the subject land prior to the filing of the color-of-title application in the absence of either a relinquishment of the mining claims or a mining contest resulting in a finding that the mining claims are null and void.

ADVERSE POSSESSION

Good faith and peaceful adverse possession for more than 20 years pursuant to a claim of title is required to establish a class 1 color-of-title claim under 43 U.S.C. § 1068 (1982). There can be no peaceful, adverse possession where applicant's chain of title commences at a time when the land was withdrawn and such a claim is properly rejected.

Arizona Real Estate Exchange, Inc., 94 IBLA 1 (Sept. 18, 1986)

An applicant for a class 1 color-of-title claim must show peaceful adverse possession of the claimed lands for a period of at least 20 years. Mere occupancy of public lands and the making of improvements thereon give rise to no vested rights against the United States, absent some colorable claim of right of possession.

Jerry G. Perry, 85 IBLA 93 (Feb. 14, 1985)

BLM may properly reject a color-of-title application filed pursuant to sec. 1 of the Color of Title Act, as amended, 43 U.S.C. § 1068 (1982), where the applicant claims chain of title originating with a certificate of tax sale to the county, executed prior to the withdrawal for Federal purposes. A certificate of tax sale does not constitute a conveyance and does not establish color of title because the right of redemption had not expired and there can be no adverse possession.

Richard F. Christensen, 85 IBLA 108 (Feb. 14, 1985)

The obligation for proving a valid color-of-title claim is upon the applicant. A failure to carry the burden of proof with respect to any one of the elements for a color-of-title claim is fatal to the application.

An application for a class 1 color-of-title claim made pursuant to the Color of Title Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1068 (1982), requires that the land be adversely held in good faith, for at least 20 years by the claimant or its predecessors-in-title. Acquiring title to Federal lands by tax deed initiates a new title for the purpose of determining when possession under color of title commenced. A certificate of tax sale for a period preceding execution of the tax deed does not establish a color-of-title right transferable to the grantee of the tax deed where a right of redemption continued in effect because there can be no adverse possession in such case.

To establish a class 1 color-of-title application filed under the Color of Title Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1068 (1982), claimed improvements must enhance the value of the land or the land must be reduced to cultivation at

When a patent to the land incorporates by reference a description of the land as being bounded by a river and the land described in the color-of-title application is for the land accreted to the applicant's property, the applicant as the riparian owner has title to the accreted lands. Neither a color-of-title application nor a sale of the lands to the applicant by BLM would be proper.

Where BLM has rejected a color-of-title application for land described as being bounded on the north by a river and there is evidence showing that the applicant may in fact have color of title to the land if it avulsed to her property, the decision will be set aside and remanded to BLM for consideration of whether title to the land is in the United States.

APPRAISED VALUE

Where, in computing the acreage of a parcel of land for purposes of arriving at its fair market value in a conveyance to a color-of-title applicant, BLM relied on planimetric measurements of the parcel as depicted on older survey plats and field notes and there is evidence the acreage may subsequently have changed through erosion or accretion, the Board will remand the case to BLM for a resurvey to determine the acreage actually existing in the tract on the date of appraisal.

The Board will not overturn a BLM appraisal of the fair market value of a parcel of land in a conveyance to a color-of-title applicant where BLM considered the amount of land fit for agricultural use (the highest and best use) in comparing sales of comparable parcels and did not consider the unsubstantiated impact on fair market value of future erosion of the parcel. Fair market value is not controlled by acreage alone, but depends upon difference in use, character, and productivity.

A color-of-title applicant is properly accorded an equitable deduction from the appraised fair market value of the claimed parcel of land based on the longevity of the applicant's colorable title figured from the date of acquisition by the applicant to the date good faith possession ceased, as well as an equitable deduction based on the length of the applicant's chain of title.

A color-of-title applicant is not entitled to an equitable deduction from the appraised fair market value of the claimed parcel of land based on the increased costs of financing the original purchase due to discovery of a defect in title or any supposed further doubt as to Federal title.

GOOD FAITH

An application for a class 1 color-of-title claim made pursuant to the Color of Title Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1068 (1982), requires that the land be adversely held in good faith for at least 20 years by the claimant or its predecessors-in-title. Acquiring title to Federal lands by tax deed initiates a new title for the purpose of determining when possession under color of title commenced. A certificate of tax sale for a period preceding execution of the tax deed does not establish a color-of-title right transferable to the grantee of the tax deed where a right of redemption continued in effect because there can be no adverse possession in such case.

PRIVITY

An application for a class 1 color-of-title claim made pursuant to the Color of Title Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1068 (1982), requires that the land be adversely held in good faith, for at least 20 years by the claimant or its predecessors-in-title. Acquiring title to Federal lands by tax deed initiates a new title for the purpose of determining when possession under color of title commenced. A certificate of tax sale for a period preceding execution of the tax deed does not establish a color-of-title right transferable to the grantee of the tax deed where a right of redemption continued in effect because there can be no adverse possession in such case.

Middle Rio Grande Conservancy District, 86 IBLA 41 (Apr. 9, 1985)

The burden of proving a valid class 1 color-of-title claim is upon the applicants. A color-of-title application is properly rejected where the applicants claim a chain of title originating with a conveyance executed subsequent to a withdrawal for Federal purposes and within 20 years of the time the applicants learned of the title defect.

COMMUNICATION SITES

An appraisal by BLM of fair market value for a communication site right-of-way will not be set aside on appeal if an appellant fails to show error in BLM's appraisal method or fails to show by convincing evidence that charges are excessive. In the absence of a showing of error that the appraisal methods used by BLM are incorrect, an appraisal may be rebutted only by another appraisal.

Horizon Communications, 91 IBLA 399 (Apr. 30, 1986)

Mesa Broadcasting Co., 94 IBLA 381 (Dec. 5, 1986)

An appraisal of fair market value for a communication site right-of-way will not be set aside on appeal unless an appellant is able to show error in the appraisal method or demonstrate by convincing evidence that charges are excessive. The preferred method for determining the fair market value of nonlinear rights-of-way is the comparable lease appraisal.

Jim Doering, 91 IBLA 131 (Mar. 20, 1986)

Jancur, Inc., 93 IBLA 310 (Sept. 11, 1986)

Under the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1761(a) (1982), an application for a right-of-way may be rejected by the Secretary or his duly authorized representative in his discretion. Where the decision is based on a reasoned analysis of factors involved, with due regard for the public interest, a BLM decision to reject an application will be affirmed.

Dale Ludington, 94 IBLA 167 (Oct. 28, 1986)

An appraisal of fair market value for a communication site right-of-way will not be set aside on appeal if an appellant fails to show error in the appraisal methods used or fails to show by convincing evidence that the charges are excessive. In the absence of a preponderance of evidence that a BLM appraisal is erroneous, such an appraisal generally may be rebutted only by another appraisal.

Where BLM grants a communication site right-of-way under sec. 501 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1761 (1982) and the grantee fails to file an application for assignment as required by 43 CFR 2803.6-3, rental resulting from a subsequent appraisal may be properly assessed against the grantee. The period of assessment properly included that period the grantee, under a private arrangement, allowed another party to use the right-of-way.

Reo Broadcast Management Co., 98 IBLA 139 (June 22, 1987)

Harvey Singleton, 101 IBLA 248 (Feb. 29, 1988)

An appraisal of fair market value for a communication site right-of-way will not be set aside on appeal if an appellant fails to show the rental rate is excessive. Absent a showing that appraisal methods used to set the rental rate are incorrect, a BLM appraisal may, in general, only be rebutted by another appraisal.

Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad Co., 101 IBLA 252 (Feb. 29, 1988)

Increased rental charges for a right-of-way issued under the Act of Mar. 4, 1911, and reappraised under 43 CFR 2802.1-7(a) (1979), are imposed "commencing with the ensuing charge year." The ensuing charge year is the rental year which begins following the date of the decision giving notice of the reappraisal and an opportunity for a hearing.

COMMUNICATION SITES--Continued

BLM may reduce rental payments for communication site rights-of-way if it determines that the imposition of the fair market value rental would cause an undue hardship on the right-of-way holder or applicant.

High Country Communications, Inc., 105 IBLA 14 (Oct. 11, 1988)

Generally, the proper appraisal method for determining the fair market value of nonlinear rights-of-way, including communications sites, is the comparable lease method of appraisal. An appraisal may be set aside and the case remanded where the record on appeal shows insufficient analysis of the other leases considered in the appraisal to verify their comparability with the right-of-way appraised.

Communications Enterprises, Inc., 105 IBLA 132 (Oct. 26, 1988)

Generally, the proper appraisal method for determining the fair market value of nonlinear rights-of-way, including communications sites, is the comparable lease method of appraisal. An appraisal may be set aside and the case remanded where the record on appeal shows insufficient analysis of the other leases considered in the appraisal to verify their comparability with the right-of-way appraised.

Under 43 CFR 2803.1-2(b), a reduction or waiver of the rental rate for a right-of-way may be granted when the holder of the right-of-way provides without charge, or at a reduced rate, a valuable service to the public.

Approval of an application for a communication site right-of-way pursuant to sec. 501(a)(5) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1761(a)(5) (1982), is discretionary with the Department. A decision rejecting a single-user right-of-way application will be affirmed on appeal where it is predicated on the public interest in limiting authorized sites to multi-user facilities and

BLM properly holds a communications site right-of-way grant for termination where the holder failed to pay the annual rental charges for the first and second years of the grant within 30 days following notification of BLM's determination of the fair market value of the grant for those years.

D. R. Johnson Lumber Co., 106 IBLA 379 (Jan. 19, 1989)

Where BLM adjusts the annual rental for a telecommunications site right-of-way based on the comparable lease method of valuation and, following an informal hearing on the appraisal, abandons the appraisal in favor of a market data study of telecommunications site annual rental values, the decision establishing the rental on the basis of the market data study will be vacated and remanded for reappraisal, where the market study did not fully identify the lease transactions relied upon and BLM provided no analysis of how the right-of-way being appraised compared to any particular information in the market study.

Mountain States Telephone & Telegraph Co., 107 IBLA 82 (Jan. 31, 1989)

Where BLM has set the annual rental charges for a communications site right-of-way based on an appraisal of the fair market rental value of that site which failed, without adequate justification, to consider a comparable lease of arguable significance, the Board will set aside the decision setting the rental charges and remand for a reappraisal and any necessary recalculation of such charges.

While it is within the province of the judicial branch to adjudicate the constitutionality of statutes, it is outside the jurisdiction of the Board. The legislative history of the Act of July 6, 1960, 74 Stat. 334 (Sisk Act) shows Congress fully considered the constitutionality of the compensation provisions

The Supreme Court has definitively established in United States v. Locke, 53 U.S.L.W. 4433 (Apr. 2, 1985), that the provisions of sec. 314 of FLPMA, which provide that, upon the failure of a mining claimant to timely file annually either evidence of the performance of annual assessment work or a notice of intention to hold a mining claim, the claim is conclusively deemed abandoned and void, is constitutional and does not result in a deprivation of due process of law.

Charlene & Robert Schilling, 87 IBLA 52 (May 23, 1985)

In United States v. Locke, 105 S. Ct. 1785 (1985), the United States Supreme Court held that sec. 314 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), is constitutional. Sec. 314 provides that upon the failure of a mining claimant to timely file either evidence of the performance of annual assessment work or a notice of intention to hold a mining claim, the claim is conclusively presumed to be abandoned and void. Therefore, a mining claimant is not deprived of due process where his claim is rendered abandoned and void for failure to timely make the required filing.

Legislation concerning disposition of the public lands cannot generally be construed as authorizing the transfer of title to lands previously conveyed out of Federal ownership and which are no longer part of the public domain. To hold otherwise would pose serious constitutional problems concerning deprivation of property without due process of law in violation of the Fifth Amendment. A well-established principle of

DUE PROCESS

Mining claims located on lands closed to mineral entry are null and void from their inception as a matter of law, and no property rights are created thereby. Therefore, no contest proceeding, notice, or hearing is required preliminary to a decision holding that such claims are invalid. State of Alaska v. Heirs of Dinah Albert, 90 IBLA 14 (Dec. 4, 1985)

A decision by BLM denying a request to amend an existing resource management plan or a management framework plan is not subject to appeal to the Board of Land Appeals. Although this situation is not expressly covered by the terms of 43 CFR 1610.5-2(a) (which allows administrative review of approval or amendment of resource management plans only via protests to the Director of BLM, whose decision is final for the Department), logic dictates denial of a request for an amendment of such a plan must follow the same avenue of review. It is distinguishable from actions on applications following classification or decisions implementing a management plan or amendment, which are appealable to this Board.

Harold E. Carrasco, Ray W. Carrasco, 90 IBLA 39 (Dec. 10, 1985)

A State protest of a Native allotment application filed pursuant to sec. 905(a)(5)(B) of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1634(a)(5)(B) (1982), will be considered sufficient to require the adjudication of the application pursuant to the Act of May 17, 1906, as amended, where it identifies in part, with some particularity, a public interest in access to public lands, resources, or bodies of water which could be jeopardized by confirmation of the allotment application.

State of Alaska, 95 IBLA 196 (Jan. 14, 1987)

A State protest against approval of a Native allotment application fails to state with sufficient specificity the facts upon which conclusions concerning public access are made so as to conform to provision of 43 U.S.C. § 1634(a)(5)(B) (1982), where the protest recites that the applied-for land is the site of an existing seaplane base, boat launch, and trail, when it appears none of the claimed improvements are located on the allotment. Since the State's protest does not describe the land claimed by the Native allotment applicant with specificity under such a circumstance, the allotment may be granted to the Native applicant, all else being regular.

There is no authority for the reservation of easements in Native allotments comparable to sec. 17(b) of ANCSA, 43 U.S.C. § 1616(b) (1982), governing reservations of easements in conveyances to Native corporations. CONTESTS AND PROTESTS--ContinuedGENERALLY--Continued

A protest of a BLM declaration that a party is the successful high bidder at a timber sale is not a protest of a timber management decision governed by 43 CFR 5003.3, as the protesting party has no way of knowing who may bid at the sale or who will submit the high bid at the time a decision to conduct a sale is published. The regulations applicable to such protests are those found at 43 CFR 4.450-2.

Where there is a lack of evidence in the record that BLM provided interested parties an opportunity to file objections to the official filing of a plat of resurvey prior to such filing, objections filed subsequently will not be subject to dismissal as untimely protests under 43 CFR 4.450-2. Rather, they will be considered as objections to the resurvey lodged with BLM, and BLM's adjudication of those objections will result in a decision which is subject to appeal to the Board of Land Appeals.

Peter Paul Groth, 99 IBLA 104 (Sept. 22, 1987)

The motivation of a Government agency initiating a contest against mining claims is irrelevant. The fact that such contest challenges the validity of certain mining claims and not of others in the same general area does not constitute a denial of due process. The Board of Land Appeals cannot abnegate its responsibility to determine the validity of mining claims when that issue is presented upon appeal. When that issue is properly presented, mining claims are properly declared null and void upon a showing of lack of discovery of a valuable mineral deposit within the claims.

United States v. Jerry E. Franklin, 99 IBLA 120 (Sept. 22, 1987)

The assumption required by 30 U.S.C. § 29 (1982) "that no adverse claim exists" does not apply to claims which did not exist at the time of publication of notice of a patent application and for which no adverse claim could have been filed.

The assumption "that no adverse claim exists" required by 30 U.S.C. § 29 (1982), operates as a presumption that the patent applicant holds superior possessory title so that the Department may proceed to determine the question of whether his mining claim is valid under the mining laws. If the Department determines that the applicant's claim is valid and issues a patent, a rival claim becomes a nullity because there is no longer any Federal land to which it can attach as a location under the mining laws. If the patent application is rejected, matters are restored to where they stood prior to the application, and a rival locator may adverse a second application for land or apply for a patent himself.

A locator who fails to file an adverse claim against an application for patent may file a protest on the grounds that the applicant has failed to comply with the mining laws.

A judgment rendered in adverse proceedings is not conclusive as to matters which might have been decided, but only as to matters which were in fact decided. Unlike litigation over title to real property, the judgment in a judicial proceeding between locators determines superiority of possessory title. Unless mandated by the terms of the judgment, there may be no reason to conclude that, in reaching its judgment, the court made a finding of fact argued for by a party when offering evidence.

The effect attributed to a judgment issued in adverse proceedings must rest upon the judicial authority of the court in resolving conflicts as to facts and making rulings upon applicable law. Although a settlement reached by the parties must be reviewed and approved by the court, if it approves, there is no need to decide the factual and legal issues on which it otherwise would have based its decision. For this reason, factual and legal conclusions stated in a settlement to which the United States is not a party cannot be binding upon the Department.

Neither the assumption required by 30 U.S.C. § 29 (1982), "that no adverse claim exists" nor the prohibition that "thereafter no objection from third parties to the issuance of a patent shall be heard" applies to invalidate mining claims. The inability to initiate an adverse proceeding once the publication period has passed does not render mining claims invalid if they are otherwise valid under the law.

State of Alaska (Elliot R. Lind) (On Reconsideration), 104 IBLA 12 (Aug. 17, 1988)

Under the Confirmation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1165 (1982), 2 years from the date of issuance of a "receipt upon the final entry" an entryman acquires a right to a patent if there is "no pending contest or protest." The statute's wording does not provide for any exception and the Department cannot defeat a right by creating an exception to its application.

A protest of the acceptance of a notice of location of a homestead which was rejected on appeal could not constitute a protest against approval of an application to purchase filed 3 years later. Until the application to purchase was filed, there could be no final entry to which the Confirmation Act,

43 U.S.C. § 1165 (1982), could apply and, correspondingly, the protest could not be a "protest against the validity of such entry" so as to preclude application of the Act.

A field investigation report prepared by BLM is not a protest.

The Confirmation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1165 (1982), does not apply when the applicant has not tendered payment for the land and a receipt has not been issued.

An Alaska Native allotment applicant is required to make satisfactory proof of substantially continuous use and occupancy of the land for a minimum period of 5 years. Such use and occupancy contemplates substantial actual possession or use of the land, at least potentially exclusive of others. In a private contest initiated by a Native corporation following a BLM decision holding the Native allotment for approval, the Native corporation carries the burden of showing by a preponderance of the evidence that the Native allotment application is not valid.

Kootznookoo, Inc. v. Heirs of Jimmie Johnson, 109 IBLA 128 (June 8, 1989)

When a rival mining claimant files an adverse claim against a mineral patent application, the adverse claimant is required to commence proceedings in a court of competent jurisdiction within 30 days after filing his claim, and failure so to do shall be a waiver of his adverse claims.

The failure to file a timely appeal from a decision by an Administrative Law Judge in a private contest declaring mining claims invalid precludes the Board from considering the contestee's appeal from the

Where an application for mineral patent of lode claims is filed and no adverse claim is asserted as required by 30 U.S.C. § 30 (1982), the character of the deposit as lode is conclusively established as to any adverse claimant, and a subsequent challenge by such claimant asserting the claimed deposits are placer is properly rejected.

Melvin Helit, A-Able Plumbing, Inc., 110 IBLA 144 (Aug. 10, 1989)

Jurisdiction over disputes between rival mining claimants is reserved to the courts, and it is not for this Department to decide whether one claimant has a better right to a claim than a rival claimant. Approval of a mining plan of operations is based upon a determination that such operations will not result in unnecessary or undue degradation of Federal lands, and not on a determination that the party submitting the plan of operations will be able to conduct the proposed operations without trespassing on lands held by others. Therefore, one seeking to prevent operations outlined in a plan of operations submitted to BLM because such operations allegedly would result in trespass should seek such relief in a court of competent jurisdiction.

Jurisdiction over disputes between rival mining claimants is reserved to the courts, and it is not for the Department to decide whether one claimant has a better right to a claim because the rival claimant has allegedly failed to file the document required under sec. 314 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1976).

An applicant for attorney fees is not entitled to an award by the Board for costs incurred in connection with court proceedings, travel, telephone bills, or postage. The Board has no obligation to seek clarification of an application that fails to explain, allocate, or prorate fees and expenses; and in appropriate circumstances, such as in this case, the application may be denied on that basis.

GENERALLY--Continued

Where by the terms of a Government contract the Board lacks authority over any dispute arising out of the contract's labor provisions, the Board has determined as a matter of policy that it will normally exercise jurisdiction over other labor-related matters in the same contract only to the extent that they arise primarily from causes other than the labor standards provisions.

Where the Bureau of Reclamation, in a solicitation of bids for construction of pipelines and agricultural drain structures, and for enlarging an existing open channel wasteway, included in its solicitation and contract documents a photocopy of a general Federal Register wage determination, containing footnotes to the effect that 20-percent lower wage rates were permissible in connection with utility projects, and the contracting officer merely marked the footnotes with arrows properly indicating the textual paragraphs to which the notes applied, the contractor's conclusion that the agency was representing the project to be a utility project was a unilateral mistake on his part for which the agency was not responsible. To the extent that he believed that the footnotes were ambiguous, it was the contractor's responsibility to make inquiry of the Labor Department in order to clarify the matter before bidding, not after the contract was let.

A Government agency in its bid solicitation makes no representation as to the amount of wages a bidder will have to pay if it is awarded the contract. The job classification and wage-rate information set forth in contract documents specify only minimum rates, not maxima; and a contractor is not entitled to assume that the rates set forth are all that he will have to pay. Moreover, if a contractor is mistaken in his interpretation of the job-classification standards, or if he believes them to be in any way erroneous or ambiguous, his only recourse lies with the Labor Department. The contracting agency has no authority and little ability to clarify the Labor Department's wage determinations. The Board, on the basis of Binghamton and Collins, expressly rejects the notion that the contracting officer is primarily responsible for resolving job-classification, wage-cost, or other labor-related

The granting by the Board of a motion for dismissal or for summary judgment made by one party requires only that the Board assume the truth of the facts being asserted by the other party. It does not require that the Board accept either the theory of the case or the statement of the law being urged by that party. Nor, in the case of an affidavit, is the Board bound to assume that the facts as alleged by the affiant are true when there is substantial evidence to the contrary and the affiant's assertions are merely conclusory.

A claim under a construction contract for diversion of a river around a construction site is denied, where the Board finds that prior to a dispute arising, the parties had interpreted the contract as requiring the contractor to do the work involving the diversion for which the claim was made.

In a case where the Government admitted liability for the removal of timber cribbing below elevation 2317 in the construction of a dam and for its replacement with compacted backfill but where the parties disagreed on both the amount of cribbing excavated and compacted backfill placed, as well as on the prices payable therefore, the Board substantially accepts the systematic measurements of the project engineer as to the quantities of cribbing excavated and backfill placed but finds that the unit prices to which the contractor is entitled by way of an equitable adjustment for the disputed items are much greater than the unit prices proposed by the contracting officer in a unilateral change order. The 101-day time extension requested by appellant for performance of the work is found by the Board to be greatly overstated, however, with the Board finding a 20-day time extension to be warranted by the evidence.

A claim for the placement of sheet piling under a contract for the construction of a dam is denied, where the testimony of the project engineer that the contractor had proposed furnishing the sheet piling for its convenience is corroborated by a contemporaneous entry in the project diary and the testimony of appellant's vice president to the contrary is uncorroborated.

where the Board finds that the work covered by the claim stemmed from the flouting by appellant of the specification requirement that where concrete is to be placed on any excavated surface special care shall be taken not to disturb the bottom of the excavation more than necessary and that faced with the prospect of being required to remove all of the disturbed material in the area of the upstream apron and replace the same with concrete to the planned grade at the contractor's expense, the contractor opted to accept the clay-seal alternative and agreed to perform under such alternative at no additional cost to the Government.

Appeal of Volk Construction, Inc., IBCA-1419-1-81 et al. (June 30, 1987) 94 I.D. 221

A contractor's claim for unreimbursed indirect costs is denied, where the contractor failed to comply with provisions of a cost-plus-fixed-fee contract which expressly provided for a method of adjusting of provisional indirect cost rates during performance of the contract. The evidence showed that the contractor never requested that indirect rates be renegotiated until after completion of the contract, and that the projected overrun was the result of a retroactive conversion by the contractor of the contract's dual indirect rates to a single-rate structure.

The Board denied a contractor's claim for unreimbursed indirect costs where the contractor failed to notify the contracting officer of a potential cost overrun as required by the Limitation of Funds Clause of the contract, or demonstrate that compliance with the Clause's notification requirement was excused.

Where the Board found that a contract modification representing the settlement of certain claims against the Government did not represent the final integrated expression of the parties' agreement as it pertained to other claims that were not being settled, it allowed the introduction of parol evidence to ascertain the true intent of the parties as to effect of the modification. The Board further found that parol evidence established a mutual agreement differing from that suggested by the modification. Thus, the contractor was not barred from asserting its subsequent claim on the grounds of alleged accord and satisfaction or payment and release.

Appeal of Gracon Corp., IBCA-2271 (Oct. 18, 1988)

A bidder is entitled to reasonably rely on indications in the specifications and the Government's pre-award actions in ascertaining the nature and timing of the work to be performed under a contract; and where numerous Government delays prevent timely performance and the work is carried over into the winter and spring months, causing substantial additional costs, the Government is liable for the additional costs.

Appeal of Middlesex Contractors & Riggers, Inc., IBCA-1964 (Feb. 8, 1989) 96 I.D. 31

Where a contractor's conduct during performance of a tree-clearing contract strongly indicates that he understood that trimming was a significant part of the work, such conduct is considered persuasive evidence of what the contract required, in considering the contractor's claim for alleged extra costs incurred by such trimming.

Where a contractor demonstrated the established practice in the tree-clearing industry regarding the cutting of trees which were located on the outer border of the contract cutting zone, and the Government inspector's procedure indicates that he improperly directed the contractor to cut trees clearly beyond the area considered by industry practice to be within the cutting zone, the Board found such direction to

Appeal of Hal Allred, IBCA-2447-A (Feb. 16, 1989) 96 I.D. 62

Where the evidence demonstrated the occurrence of a 2-year delay between the time a contract was terminated by the contracting officer and his final decision that the termination be for default, such action was upheld by the Board due to the contractor's failure to show that it was materially prejudiced by the delay, or that such delay was exclusively the fault of the Government.

Appeal of Scalf Engineering Co. & Pike County Construction Co. (A Joint Venture), IBCA-2328 (June 9, 1989) 96 I.D. 257

Allowable Costs

A contractor's claim for additional compensation for travel costs incurred during installation of a computer program package was allowed where language in the contractor's price list, incorporated by reference into the contract, specifically stated that the cost of installation was "exclusive of transportation and hotel costs," and there was no evidence that the Government rejected, amended, or withdrew such language from the contract prior to award. The Board found that the contractor made its intent manifest with respect to what was covered by its pricing proposal, and the Government accepted appellant's pricing structure by incorporating it into the contract.

Where a contractor presented evidence of actual costs incurred for extra work and materials under the contract, such costs were presumed to be reasonable and established a prima facie case of recovery, which the Government failed to rebut.

Appeal of Pat Wagner d.b.a. A-Plumbing Co., IBCA-1612-8-82 (May 14, 1985) 92 I.D. 195

In a cost-plus-fixed-fee level of effort contract with task order options held by the Government, the contractor had the burden to prove: (1) that it gave the proper notice and received authorization from the contracting officer, under the Limitation of Costs Clause, before it could recover for any foreseeable overrun; (2) that the Government, in delaying performance of the contract, had breached a contract obligation, which breach caused increased costs, in order to recover increased overhead and general, and administrative costs above the contract ceiling for delays as an equitable adjustment for an implied change arising, de facto, under the Stop Work Order Clause; (3) that the Government had an obligation to exercise options in order for the contractor to recover any amounts for failure to exercise such options. Where the contractor waited until after performance was complete to invoice for amounts in excess of contract limitations and had earlier agreed to a change accomplishing an increase of costs limitation as covering all performance, it could not and did not carry its burden for compensable overrun; where it waited over 6 years to make a claim, failed to present auditable cost records at any time, relied on the mere existence of delays to establish a Government breach and failed to connect any alleged breach to specific cost increases, it failed to carry its burden of proving delays amounting to a breach such as would allow recovery for an equitable adjustment for expenses in excess of contract ceilings as a de facto stop under the Stop Work Order clause; where it presented mere allegations of fraud and malevolence in Government motivation and conduct but failed to present proof of the allegations nor even of what they meant, it failed to carry its burden to show that the Government had some obligation to exercise contract options. The appeal was denied.

Appeal of Optimal Data Corp., IBCA-1695 (June 20, 1985) 92 I.D. 269

A claim for overrun costs is denied where an invoice is relied upon as notice to the contracting officer of impending overrun without a showing that the contracting officer had knowledge of and encouraged the added work needed to complete contract performance.

Appeal of Decision Science Consortium, Inc., IBCA-1651-2-83 (Sept. 6, 1985) 92 I.D. 372

A contractor under a timber sale contract was entitled to recover costs incurred for the purchase of commercial rock when it could be determined from the evidence: (1) the total cubic yards of rock purchased by the contractor; (2) the cost per cubic yard; and (3) that such costs were reasonable.

Theodore R. McNeeley d/b/a Ted McNeeley Logging, IBCA-1844 (Oct. 23, 1985)

Except for correction of a mathematical error in the contracting officer's decision, a contractor's claim for additional settlement costs under an architect-engineer contract terminated for the convenience of the Government is denied, where the appellant failed to show by a preponderance of the evidence that a sub-mission schedule contained in the contract should not be used in determining the amount of the termination settlement to which the contractor is entitled. The appellant also failed to substantiate the amount claimed as subcontractor settlement costs.

Where, in the context of a $26 million construction contract, a contractor interprets a brand-name-or-equal clause for check valves to permit the substitution of valves it considers to be functionally equivalent to those specified, and requests the Government's approval of such substitution, but the request is denied without consistent or accurate reasons, and the contractor on appeal shows by substantial evidence that its proposed substitute valves meet or exceed the requirements that the Government considered essential at the time the contract was entered into, the contractor is entitled to the difference in costs between the valves it intended to use and those insisted upon by the Government.

Brinderson Corp., IBCA-1814 (Jan. 31, 1986)

Where, in the context of a major contract for the procurement and standardization of computer equipment to serve a Federal agency and its clientele, a secondary Government contract is entered into to develop the software needed to chargeback computer user costs, and the secondary contractor is required to use a new Government computer installed by the major contractor but is given incorrect access information for its use and as a result incurs substantial additional programming costs before the error is discovered, the secondary contractor is entitled to compensation from the Government for the additional costs incurred since, in the absence of an express and adequate disclaimer, the Government under the Government-furnished property clause warrants that the equipment it makes available is suitable for immediate use as provided.

Indian Affiliates, Inc., IBCA-1861 (Feb. 18, 1986)

Bechtold Construction Co., Inc., IBCA-1660-3-83 et al. (Mar. 13, 1986)

The Board finds disallowed costs under a cost-reimbursable contract with an educational institution to be allowable where additional documentation provided the contracting officer indicated that the disallowances resulted from occasional lapses, errors, or omissions in an otherwise accurate accounting system and that the contracting officer had not exercised his independent judgment to review such evidence respecting costs questioned by the auditor.

Appeal of Louisiana State University, IBCA-2057 (Mar. 21, 1986) 93 I.D. 139

A contract is not ambiguous merely because there is imperfect correspondence between its specifications and its pay items. Thus, a contractor is not entitled to additional compensation for work that is clearly required by its contract, even though such work is not expressly included, or is arguably inadequately included, in the specific pay items of the contract.

A subcontractor ignores a clear reference to a payment provision in a statement of work provision at its peril; and where the reference to the payment provision was clearly erroneous resulting in a patent ambiguity, the subcontractor had a duty to seek clarification of the payment provision before bidding.

Where a contract contains a latent ambiguity as to payment for fire-seal support brackets required to be installed in a pump-room shaft opening, and such brackets are not an integral or essential part of the pump-support brackets for which the contract provides payment, a subcontractor's interpretation that it will be paid separately for installation of the fire-seal brackets is not unreasonable and will be sustained.

Where a subcontractor, at the time it bid on the task of embedding pump casings in concrete, had no reason to anticipate the existence of obstructions, created by a previous subcontractor, that would interfere with its concrete pour, and thus incurred additional costs for labor and materials in performing the work, it was entitled to compensation for the unanticipated costs.

Where the Government defended against an appeal seeking additional costs for performance on the ground that the contractor had followed an unpermitted change in its accounting system in reaching the amount of the costs sought, the Board noted that a change in a contractor's accounting system is no bar to recovery unless it has a prejudicial effect on the Government and, having determined that the Government had shown no such prejudice, held that the accounting system change was no bar to recovery in this case.

Where the contracting officer, being aware that the contractor had incurred costs up to or beyond the ceiling of the contract's limitation of costs clause, nevertheless communicated his urgent desire that the contractor continue to perform, the Board held that the limitation clause had been waived and that it could not be used to bar recovery of reasonable, allowable costs above the limit incurred in performing the contract.

Appeal of Salisbury & Dietz, Inc., IBCA-2090 (Aug. 31,

A claim for overrun costs under a purchase order calling for the fabrication and installation of highway signs is denied when the appellant fails to show (i) that any work performed was in excess of that required by the contract; (ii) that timely notice of an impending overrun could not have been given if its accounting system had been adequate; and (iii) that the contracting officer was chargeable with constructive knowledge of the impending overrun.

Appeal of Pat Wagner d.b.a. A-Plumbing Co., IBCA-1612-8-82 (May 14, 1985) 92 I.D. 195

A claim for a Category 1 Differing Site Condition was denied where a contractor, engaged in core drilling operations, encountered a layer of "basal gravel" between clay and granitic bedrock, and the drill logs appended to the contract included, core boring results and profiles which on their face gave readily discernible, strong, and therefore entirely reasonable indications within the meaning of the Differing Site Conditions clause that such conditions should have been anticipated at various areas of the site.

A claim for a Category 1 Differing Site Condition was denied where it was determined that the contractor failed to properly assess the information to which the Invitation For Bids directed him, and the contractor's interpretation of the materials to be encountered during drilling operations was found to be unreasonable.

Wyman Construction, Inc., IBCA-1669-4-83 (May 31, 1985) 92 I.D. 237

Where a contractor alleged that changed conditions resulted from a mutual mistake regarding geological conditions and that its costs increased due to encountering more severe caving conditions than anticipated at a test hole drill site, the Board found that the contract required remedial procedures to prevent caving when drilling in unconsolidated material and the contractor could not reasonably contend that caving conditions were not to be anticipated.

A contractor's claim for additional compensation on the basis of changed site conditions will be denied where the sole basis for the claim is unanticipated costs allegedly incurred by the contractor as a result of a County decision to enforce existing vehicle weight restrictions that precluded the use of premixed concrete trucks on the only access road to the project site. It is immaterial whether the Government's own actions may have precipitated the County's enforcement decision. Liquidated damages are properly assessed when the contract provision authorizing their assessment is reasonable, and the contractor fails to show that the delay in the completion of the work arose from unforeseeable causes beyond its control and without fault or negligence on its part.

Appeal of Newbery State, Inc., IBCA-1771-1-84 et al. (Oct. 14, 1986)

Contractors performing work under a clearing contract were not entitled to an equitable adjustment for having encountered substantial quantities of rock outcroppings which required additional hand clearing, where a full, pre-bid site investigation would have disclosed the presence of such visible rock conditions. The contractors based their bid on partial investigations of the project area, and on statements by a Government inspector, which the Board held did not misrepresent conditions at the site. The Board finds that a contractor is not entitled to additional compensation for the quality of finishing required on concrete work involved in the construction of raceways (rearing areas) at a fish hatchery where the concrete subcontractor contends (i) that the finishing required was superior to the finish it had anticipated would be sufficient for the project and (ii) that the finish achieved by a specified date was "nicer" than the finish on existing raceways but the Board finds that the quality of concrete finish required by the Government was not in excess of that required to meet the standards clearly set forth in the contract specifications.

Appeals of 3A/Magnolia-J.V., IBCA-1885 & 1886 (June 28, 1985) 92 I.D. 284

When the Government properly terminates a contract for its convenience, the contractor is entitled only to proper settlement costs incurred thereafter; a contractor may not recover expenses incurred in continuing performance after receiving the notice of termination where the Government did not desire such termination and where the contractor, in ignoring the termination notice, relied on a memorandum which: (1) was written by a Government official unconnected with administration of the contract; (2) was addressed to someone other than the contractor; and (3) was dated 2 months before the termination and acquired by the contractor 1 month after the termination.

to obtain the necessary aggregate from a commercial pit.

In a case involving a dispute over the amount of soil-cement slope protection placed on the embankment portion of a dam in which the appellant relies upon a survey made by a professional land surveyor and the BIA upon a survey performed by the project engineer (a registered professional engineer) the Board accepts the BIA survey as determinative of the quantity of soil-cement placed on the embankment where it finds (i) the BIA survey had been performed at an earlier time when conditions prevailing were more conducive to accurate measurements being taken and (ii) the records maintained with respect to the BIA survey appeared to be free of the internal inconsistencies shown to be present in the survey records of the licensed land surveyor.

When the parties differ as to the amount payable as an equitable adjustment for overrun quantities of soil-cement for slope protection placed on the embankment portion of a dam and when the principal item on which the parties are apart involves equipment costs, the Board finds that the appellant has failed to show that it is entitled to any greater amount than was allowed by the contracting officer where (i) information as to the cost of contractor-owned equipment was available in the contractor's records; (ii) such information was not furnished to the Government at the time of the audit of the contractor's books or at any time thereafter; (iii) instead of furnishing its costs for contractor-owned equipment, the appellant chose to rely upon a construction guideline for costing such equipment (a lot of which was fully depreciated) despite the fact that the guidelines relied upon specifically state that they should not be used for construction such as dams, highways, and bridges; (iv) by reason of the appellant's failure to furnish its costs for contractor-owned equipment, the Board was unable to apply the standards set forth in FPR 1-15.205-9 to determine the amount to which the appellant was entitled; and (v) the comparisons made by the project engineer to which he testified support

Under a contract for the construction of a dam requiring that, except for the initial layer, all layers of soil-cement slope protection be placed in lifts 8 feet wide, the contractor sought an equitable adjustment on the ground that by reason of safety it had been necessary to place the soil-cement in 9-foot-wide lifts since it would have been dangerous to attempt to maneuver its 8-foot-wide dump trucks so as to keep them on the 8-foot-wide soil-cement layers during the laydown operation and, in any event, it would have been virtually impossible to do so since the soil-cement layers themselves and the semi-pervious portion of the inclined bank were either slippery or slick. In denying the claim, the Board found that the appellant had failed to prove its claim by a preponderance of the evidence. Supporting the denial were the Board's findings (i) that the specification requirement that the soil-cement layers be placed in 8-foot lifts did not create a condition which was hazardous per se since it was contemplated that the contractor would use part of the slope of the dam for the inside wheels of the dump trucks in the placing procedure; (ii) that this was common practice in laying a soil-cement slope; (iii) that during the laydown operation the dump trucks used in placing the soil-cement consistently had at least their outer tires on the semi-pervious portion of the slope leaving a foot or so of space between the outside duals and the edge of the soil-cement lifts on the reservoir side; (iv) that while the project engineer knew that the contractor was placing and to some extent compacting soil-cement outside the 8-foot width shown on the plans, he attributed that to the fact that the contractor did not have the equipment to provide edge control for 8-foot widths; and (v) that with careful experienced drivers, the placement of soil-cement in 8-foot-wide lifts was a relatively safe operation.

In connection with its findings, the Board notes that while appellant's witnesses concerned with operation testified that the soil-cement layers and the semi-pervious portion of the inclined bank were slippery or slick at least most of the time, there is no evidence of record showing that at any time during the contract performance the appellant characterized either of the two surfaces (the soil-cement layers or which the notes applied, the contractor's conclusion that the agency was representing the project to be a utility project was a unilateral mistake on his part for which the agency was not responsible. To the extent that he believed that the footnotes were ambiguous, it was the contractor's responsibility to make inquiry of the Labor Department in order to clarify the matter before bidding, not after the contract was let.

A Government agency in its bid solicitation makes no representation as to the amount of wages a bidder will have to pay if it is awarded the contract. The job classification and wage-rate information set forth in contract documents specify only minimum rates, not maxima; and a contractor is not entitled to assume that the rates set forth are all that he will have to pay. Moreover, if a contractor is mistaken in his interpretation of the job-classification standards, or if he believes them to be in any way erroneous or ambiguous, his only recourse lies with the Labor Department. The contracting agency has no authority and little ability to clarify the Labor Department's wage determinations. The Board, on the basis of Binghamton and Collins, expressly rejects the notion that the contracting officer is primarily responsible for resolving job-classification, wage-cost, or other labor-related issues in response to bidders' concerns, even when such clarification is sought.

In a case where the Government admitted liability for the removal of timber cribbing below elevation 2317 in the construction of a dam and for its replacement with compacted backfill but where the parties disagreed on both the amount of cribbing excavated and compacted backfill placed, as well as on the prices payable therefore, the Board substantially accepts the systematic measurements of the project engineer as to the quantities of cribbing excavated and backfill placed but finds that the unit prices to which the contractor is entitled by way of an equitable adjustment for the disputed items are much greater than the unit prices proposed by the contracting officer in a unilateral change order. The 101-day time extension requested by

Where the Bureau of Reclamation, in a solicitation of bids for construction of pipelines and agricultural drain structures, and for enlarging an existing open channel wasteway, included in its solicitation and contract documents a photocopy of a general Federal Register wage determination containing footnotes to the effect that 20-percent lower wage rates were permissible in connection with utility projects, and the contracting officer merely marked the footnotes with arrows properly indicating the textual paragraphs to which the notes applied, the contractor's conclusion that the agency was representing the project to be a utility project was a unilateral mistake on his part for which the agency was not responsible. To the extent that he believed that the footnotes were ambiguous, it was the contractor's responsibility to make inquiry of the Labor Department in order to clarify the matter before bidding, not after the contract was let.

A Government agency in its bid solicitation makes no representation as to the amount of wages a bidder will have to pay if it is awarded the contract. The job classification and wage-rate information set forth in contract documents specify only minimum rates, not maxima; and a contractor is not entitled to assume that the rates set forth are all that he will have to pay. Moreover, if a contractor is mistaken in his interpretation of the job-classification standards, or if he believes them to be in any way erroneous or ambiguous, his only recourse lies with the Labor Department. The contracting agency has no authority and little ability to clarify the Labor Department's wage determinations. The Board, on the basis of Binghamton and Collins, expressly rejects the notion that the contracting officer is primarily responsible for resolving job-classification, wage-cost, or other labor-related issues in response to bidders' concerns, even when such clarification is sought.

Differing Site Conditions (Changed Conditions)

Formal written notice given after completion of the contract work is found to satisfy the requirement of the Differing Site Conditions clause for written notice to the contracting officer, where the evidence shows that the Government had actual knowledge of the operative facts relating to the contractor's claim and no showing was made that any prejudice to the Government had resulted from the belated written notice.

Where under a construction contract for the installation of water meters, meter boxes, and service lines, the amount of excavation required for performance of the work is substantially greater than indicated in the contract documents, and the contractor encounters different types and lengths of service lines than indicated in the specifications, and which could not have been ascertained by a prebid investigation, the Board finds that such constitutes a first category differing site condition for which the contractor is entitled to an equitable adjustment under the Differing Site Conditions Clause.

A claim for a Category 1 Differing Site Condition was denied where a contractor, engaged in core drilling operations, encountered a layer of "basal gravel" between clay and granitic bedrock, and the drill logs appended to the contract included, core boring results and profiles which on their face gave readily discernible, strong, and therefore entirely reasonable indications within the meaning of the Differing Site Conditions clause that such conditions should have been anticipated at various areas of the site.

A claim for a Category 1 Differing Site Condition was denied where it was determined that the contractor failed to properly assess the information to which the Invitation For Bids directed him, and the contractor's interpretation of the materials to be encountered during drilling operations was found to be unreasonable.

Where a contractor alleged that changed conditions resulted from a mutual mistake regarding geological conditions and that its costs increased due to encountering more severe caving conditions than anticipated at a test hole drill site, the Board found that the contract required remedial procedures to prevent caving when drilling in unconsolidated material and the contractor could not reasonably contend that caving conditions were not to be anticipated.

Appeal of Dy-Met, Inc., IBCA-1341 (Aug. 9, 1985)

A contractor was found not to be eligible for an equitable adjustment based upon a Category I differing site condition, because the contract documents failed to offer any indications regarding site conditions, and thus, there was no basis upon which the contractor could have relied in preparing its bid.

In-Line Construction, IBCA-1909 (Dec. 19, 1985)

A contractor's claims for equitable adjustments because of alleged changes and differing site conditions are properly denied where the contractor offers little or no credible evidence beyond the unsupported assertions of the contractor's principal officer to justify making any adjustments other than already allowed by the contracting officer.

Bechtold Construction Co., Inc., IBCA-1660-3-83 et al. (Mar. 13, 1986)

The Board holds that the contractor failed to sustain its burden of establishing entitlement to any of its claims for extra costs; that such costs were the direct result of the contractor's failure to make a reasonable site investigation, together with its failure to carefully read the contract drawings and the specifications, prior to submitting its bid. In such circumstances the risk of incurring such costs must fall upon the contractor and not upon the Government.

Appeal of Bowie & K Enterprises, Inc., IBCA-1788 (Oct. 7, 1986)

A contractor's claim for an equitable adjustment, due to an alleged differing site condition encountered during the pile-driving portion of a residential construction project, was denied, under both a category I and category II claim, where the Board found that the contractor failed to prove what the alleged encountered subsurface condition was. The Board held that proof of subsurface conditions cannot be shown in the abstract, but must be established in the light of geological data and other relevant and probative evidence.

Appeal of Straub Construction Co., IBCA-2291-A (Aug. 19, 1987)

Contractors performing work under a clearing contract were not entitled to an equitable adjustment for having encountered substantial quantities of rock outcroppings which required additional hand clearing, where a full, pre-bid site investigation would have disclosed the presence of such visible rock conditions. The contractors based their bid on partial investigations of the project area, and on statements by a Government inspector, which the Board held did not misrepresent conditions at the site. The contractors sought to excuse their failure to inspect the entire project area on the grounds that the terrain was difficult to traverse, was covered with briars, and infested with snakes. The Board concluded however, that such factors pointed to the difficulty of conducting a full-site investigation, but did not

A claim for additional compensation based upon a claim of defective specifications is denied where the subcontractor prosecuting the appeal fails to show (i) that the Government made any attempt to enforce a particular specification provision at the station where the disputed work was performed or (ii) that the difficulties encountered in drilling holes for and installing instrumentation in the foundation of an earth-filled dam were attributable to defective specifications rather than to the failure of the prime contractor to properly coordinate the contract work.

The Board finds that a contractor is not entitled to additional compensation for the quality of finishing required on concrete work involved in the construction of raceways (rearing areas) at a fish hatchery where the concrete subcontractor contends (i) that the finishing required was superior to the finish it had anticipated would be sufficient for the project and (ii) that the finish achieved by a specified date was "nicer" than the finish on existing raceways but the Board finds that the quality of concrete finish required by the Government was not in excess of that required to meet the standards clearly set forth in the contract specifications.

Costs incurred for additional amounts of grouting and concrete required to seal fractured rock encountered during installation of ground anchors during an emergency residential subsidence project, were not compensable because the specifications contained in the contract were not defective and the contractor was responsible for choosing suitable construction methods. The contractor claimed entitlement to an equitable adjustment for such additional work and costs on the grounds that: (1) it was not provided relative boring data prior to award in order to determine subsurface conditions; (2) that the specifications were defective in that there was insufficient time involved in the bidding process to conduct an adequate subsurface site investigation; (3) that it encountered unexpected rock fractures which resulted in overruns of concrete and grout; and (4) that such conditions necessitated extra work to conform to the requirements of the contract. However, the contractor failed to sustain its burden of proof that the Government withheld relevant boring information, and the evidence demonstrated that the excess costs incurred were not the result of any defect in the specifications but pertained to those aspects of the work for which the contractor bore responsibility.

The Board holds that a constructive change occurred, entitling a timber sale purchaser to an equitable adjustment for unanticipated extra costs, upon finding: that a Government-owned aggregate stockpile, designated as a suitable source for road work required to be performed by the purchaser, proved to be inadequate; that the purchaser had relied on the availability of such source for his performance of the contract; and that it was reasonable for him, under the existing conditions, to then incur extra costs in order to obtain the necessary aggregate from a commercial pit.

Theodore R. McNeely d/b/a Ted McNeely Logging, IBCA-1844 (Oct. 23, 1985)

The Board holds that an irrigation project contractor failed to prove its case for an equitable adjustment, either on the theory of defective specifications or constructive change, where the contract-blasting specifications authorized the Bureau of Reclamation to apply or modify, at its discretion, a maximum peak particle velocity limitation for blasting vibration and damage control. Finding that the specification was aimed at protecting an old wooden flume used to irrigate about 2,300 acres of valuable orchard lands, and that damage to the flume could easily have jeopardized the entire project objective and wasted thousands of construction cost dollars, the Board also holds, in the circumstances, that the Bureau of Reclamation did not abuse or unreasonably exercise its discretion by first imposing the restriction and later relaxing it when satisfied the flume would not be damaged.

Appeal of Western Contracting Corp., IBCA-1961 (Mar. 6, 1986)

A claim for an equitable adjustment was denied where a contractor, engaged in the construction of a pipe trench for the spillway portion of a dam project, failed to demonstrate that during the cleanup phase of the excavation work, that Government inspectors directed the contractor to overexcavate beyond the neat lines required by the contract, or that material loosened during such excavation was "unsuitable" within the meaning of the specifications, as to require further excavation and placement of backfill concrete. Rather, the evidence indicated that the majority of overexcavation at the site was the result of excavation procedures determined to be for the convenience of the contractor, and thus, noncompensable under the terms of the contract.

Appeal of Newbery State, Inc., IBCA-1771-1-84 et al. (Oct. 14, 1986)

In a case where the Government admitted liability for the removal of timber cribbing below elevation 2317 in the construction of a dam and for its replacement with compacted backfill but where the parties disagree on both the amount of cribbing excavated and compacted backfill placed, as well as on the prices payable therefore, the Board substantially accepts the systematic measurements of the project engineer as to the quantities of cribbing excavated and backfill placed but finds that the unit prices to which the contractor is entitled by way of an equitable adjustment for the disputed items are much greater than the unit prices proposed by the contracting officer in a unilateral change order. The 101-day time extension requested by appellant for performance of the work is found by the Board to be greatly overstated, however, with the Board finding a 20-day time extension to be warranted by the evidence.

Under a contract for the construction of a dam, a claim for the amount of dewatering said to have been directed in excess of contract requirements is denied where the Board finds that two of the specification provisions pertaining to the placement of concrete where water is present were directly conflicting and therefore patently ambiguous and that the failure of appellant to make inquiry of the contracting officer prior to bidding resulted in the ambiguous contract provisions being interpreted against appellant.

Where a contract's plans and specifications relating to a highly technical electrical motor application contained numerous "design characteristics," including the specificity and detail commonly associated with design specifications, and expert testimony indicated that it was customary for a single engineering entity to design that type of completely integrated system, it was found that such plans and specifications could be reasonably interpreted by a prudent contractor to place design responsibility for the system on the Government.

Language in the technical provisions of a contract which required the contractor to "coordinate" various aspects of electrical motor components in order to ensure proper operation of the unit, in context of the whole contract, was found not to be sufficient to transform the fundamental design character of the specifications into a performance-type contract.

The Government was held to have wrongfully rejected hoist-gate gear motors furnished by a contractor for use on an aqueduct project, where for purposes of determining compliance with the technical specifications of the contract, the Government had employed improper output restrictions during the belated testing of such motors, and the evidence of record and the weight of expert testimony established that the motors when submitted met the requirements of the contract and of approved submittals.

Where a contractor demonstrated that it had installed an integrated hoist-gate system for an aqueduct project strictly in accordance with the detailed drawings and specifications designed and furnished by the Government, and the system as installed would not meet the performance requirements of the contract, the Board held that the failure of the system was not due to any fault of the contractor but resulted from the defective design of the Government.

Duration_of_Contract

Where a contractor sufficiently identified specific delays in the Government's responses to requests for change orders, the Board held that the contractor was entitled to a 337-day extension of the contract performance time even though there were other delays for which the Government and the contractor were concurrently responsible and other delays for which the contractor was solely responsible.

When the Board found that a contractor was entitled to additional contract performance time as a result of Government-caused delays, it was not permissible to impose liquidated damages prior to the end of the additional period of performance which extended to the date of beneficial occupancy. The Government estimated that 5 percent of the contract work remained at beneficial occupancy, which made that event the equivalent of substantial completion. The Board follows the rule that liquidated damages may not be imposed after substantial completion so the entire amount of liquidated damages was rescinded.

To the extent that he believed that the footnotes were ambiguous, it was the contractor's responsibility to make inquiry of the Labor Department in order to clarify the matter before bidding, not after the contract was let.

A Government agency in its bid solicitation makes no representation as to the amount of wages a bidder will have to pay if it is awarded the contract. The job classification and wage-rate information set forth in contract documents specify only minimum rates, not maxima; and a contractor is not entitled to assume that the rates set forth are all that he will have to pay. Moreover, if a contractor is mistaken in his interpretation of the job-classification standards, or if he believes them to be in any way erroneous or ambiguous, his only recourse lies with the Labor Department. The contracting agency has no authority and little ability to clarify the Labor Department's wage determinations. The Board, on the basis of Binghamton and Collins, expressly rejects the notion that the contracting officer is primarily responsible for resolving job-classification, wage-cost, or other labor-related issues in response to bidders' concerns, even when such clarification is sought.

General Rules of Construction

A contractor's claim for additional compensation under a tree-planting contract was denied because the contractor's interpretation of Bid Schedule language regarding the planting method was held to be unreasonable, as such interpretation would have effectively eliminated the planting requirements contained in the contract specifications. The Government's interpretation reconciled these provisions by demonstrating that no ambiguity existed within the contract terms, and that the most reasonable interpretation of the term "Plant in Rip" was that it expressed the preference of the Government for the contractor to plant in ripped areas, not exclusively, but whenever possible within the spacing requirements of the contract.

A contractor's claim for additional compensation for travel costs incurred during installation of a computer program package was allowed where language in the contractor's price list, incorporated by reference into the contract, specifically stated that the cost of installation was "exclusive of transportation and hotel costs," and there was no evidence that the Government rejected, amended, or withdrew such language from the contract prior to award. The Board found that the contractor made its intent manifest with respect to what was covered by its pricing proposal, and the Government accepted appellant's pricing structure by incorporating it into the contract.

Geostat Systems, Inc., IBCA-1611-8-82 (Mar. 13, 1985)

A claim for a Category 1 Differing Site Condition was denied where a contractor, engaged in core drilling operations, encountered a layer of "basal gravel" between clay and granitic bedrock, and the drill logs appended to the contract included core boring results and profiles which on their face gave readily discernible, strong, and therefore entirely reasonable indications within the meaning of the Differing Site Conditions clause that such conditions should have been anticipated at various areas of the site.

A claim for a Category 1 Differing Site Condition was denied where it was determined that the contractor failed to properly assess the information to which the Invitation For Bids directed him, and the contractor's interpretation of the materials to be encountered during drilling operations was found to be unreasonable.

Costs incurred for additional amounts of grouting and concrete required to seal fractured rock encountered during installation of ground anchors during an emergency residential subsidence project, were not compensable because the specifications contained in the contract were not defective and the contractor was responsible for choosing suitable construction methods. The contractor claimed entitlement to an equitable adjustment for such additional work and costs on the grounds that: (1) it was not provided relative boring data prior to award in order to determine subsurface conditions; (2) that the specifications were defective in that there was insufficient time involved in the bidding process to conduct an adequate subsurface site investigation; (3) that it encountered unexpected rock fractures which resulted in overruns of concrete and grout; and (4) that such conditions necessitated extra work to conform to the requirements of the contract. However, the contractor failed to sustain its burden of proof that the Government withheld relevant boring information, and the evidence demonstrated that the excess costs incurred were not the result of any defect in the specifications but pertained to those aspects of the work for which the contractor bore responsibility.

Where a contractor is notified by a subcontractor after the primary contract is let that the subcontractor has made a unilateral pricing mistake and cannot perform its work without additional compensation, and the contractor voluntarily pays a substantial part of the additional compensation, such costs must be borne by the contractor and not by the Government, unless the Government had reason to be aware of the subcontractor's mistake before the contract was let.

Where a successful bidder on a firm fixed-price construction contract unqualifiedly agrees, before the contract is let, to extend the time for the Government's acceptance of its bid and, after the contract is let, encounters unanticipated price increases by its intended suppliers, the Government is not liable for the cost of the increases since it is entitled to

A monetary claim by the Government against a contractor for its failure to furnish a registered professional soil engineer is sustained in part where the Board finds (i) that the contractor had reasonably interpreted the contract as requiring the services of the soils engineer for 7 weeks rather than for 9 months as contended by the Government; (ii) that the evidence offered by the appellant failed to show that the COR purported to waive the contract requirements pertaining to the soils engineer or that he was empowered to do so; (iii) that from the testimony offered by the COR it was inferred that he considered the man proposed by the contractor as a qualified soils engineer to be a competent soils technician; (iv) that it was as a soils technician that the COR approved having the contractor place the soils man on the payroll; and (v) that the

Upon finding that the contracting officer issued a change order granting a 27-day extension of time, which specifically included 3 days of delay caused by the cleaning up of rainwater damage resulting from roof leaks, and that the contracting officer based his change order on a determination that the contractor's request for the days of delay was "fair and reasonable," the Board holds that the Government waived its right to terminate the contract on the ground that the contractor breached the contract by not providing adequate protection to the building from rain damage during a reroofing project.

CONTRACT DISPUTES ACT OF 1978Generally

Consistent with its prior decisions, the Board refuses to adopt a narrow or purely technical view of the claim certification requirement of the Contract Disputes Act, concluding that the purpose of the requirement was to avoid or reduce frivolous claims, not to impose purely mechanical requirements on the contract disputes process. Accordingly, it rejects the notion that a contractor's certification in the prescribed format becomes inefficacious merely because it incorporates by reference an adequate previous submission of claim documents and computations which lacked only the necessary certification in order to become a valid CDA claim.

The granting by the Board of a motion for dismissal or for summary judgment made by one party requires only that the Board assume the truth of the facts being asserted by the other party. It does not require that the Board accept either the theory of the case or the statement of the law being urged by that party. Nor, in the case of an affidavit, is the Board bound to assume that the facts as alleged by the affiant are true when there is substantial evidence to the contrary and the affiant's assertions are merely conclusory.

Although oral modifications of Government contracts may be valid in some instances, such contract modifications normally must be reduced to writing; and they are generally not effective until the writing has been executed by both parties. There is no legal presumption that a valid settlement agreement has been entered into merely because the parties at a negotiation session generally arrive at a meeting of the minds, and the party asserting the existence of a purely oral contract modification bears a heavy burden of proof that a valid modification has occurred.

The Board denies a claim for breach of contract damages by an investigator supplier under a BPA where it finds: (i) that the placement of calls (orders) for background investigations of individuals for sensitive positions in the Government is discretionary with OPM; (ii) that under the terms of the BPA, OPM is only liable for calls actually placed with an investigator supplier; (iii) that it is undisputed that the appellant has been paid for all of the calls, actually placed with him; and (iv) that assuming, arguendo, that the terms of the BPA were breached in some way, appellant has failed to show any damages caused by the breach.

CONTRACTS--ContinuedCONTRACT DISPUTES ACT OF 1978--ContinuedAttorney_Fees

The position of the Government is substantially justified, and attorney fees under the Equal Access to Justice Act are not warranted where, in connection with a construction contract, (1) the contracting officer clearly acted reasonably and in the contractor's interest by allowing two claims and reducing the liquidated damages recommended in the Government's post-completion audit, but denying other claims for lack of proof, and (2) the agency later permitted the contractor to submit additional claims and attempted to resolve them by further audit and through interrogatories and by stipulating to certain further entitlements, but requiring the other claims to be resolved by a hearing, in a situation where the Board's ultimate award was primarily by jury verdict.

Where the Government has not acted arbitrarily or unreasonably in its negotiations prior to the Board's hearing on the merits of an underlying contract appeal, but facts and explanations become evident at the hearing that the Government would not ordinarily have been expected to know, which evidence ultimately entitles appellant to prevail on its contract claims, then the hearing was clearly essential to the appellant's case and appellant is not entitled to attorney fees or costs, since the Government's position in contesting the claim prior to the hearing was substantially justified.

Stephen J. Kenney (Application for Attorney Fees), IBCA-2132-F (Oct. 8, 1987)

The Government's position in contesting a contractor's claim for interest on a disputed construction claim paid pursuant to a settlement agreement was not substantially justified where: (1) the contracting officer ultimately paid the entire amount of the contractor's claim except for interest; (2) the contracting officer's decision denying entitlement to interest on the basis of noncertification was legally in error; (3) the contracting officer's affidavit that he thought interest was included in the settlement agreement had an insufficient basis and was patently inconsistent with other documents in the record; and (4) the appeal file compiled by the contracting officer inexplicably failed to include numerous documents that were essential to the proper resolution of the dispute between the parties, thereby giving rise to questionable assertions by counsel.

In a case where the appellant is a prevailing party on a claim constituting 39.24 percent of the total dollar value of the claims submitted, the applicant is awarded 75 percent of the attorney hours and other expenses claimed where the Board finds that the position of the Government in refusing to pay the appellant's claim in the amount initially submitted had little support in the law or in the facts.

Salisbury & Dietz, Inc. (Application for Attorney Fees), IBCA-2382-F (June 23, 1989) 96 I.D. 280

The Government's position is found not to be substantially justified in a case involving a contract partially terminated for the Government's convenience, where the Board finds (i) that there was no constancy in the Government's estimate of the costs to complete the terminated portion of the contract; (ii) that at the contracting officer level and in litigation the Government ignored the distinction between what might be considered a fair profit under a competitively bid contract terminated for the Government's convenience and what would be a fair profit if a negotiated contract is so terminated; and (iii) that in determining what a fair profit should be the contracting officer largely ignored the factors set forth in FAR 49.202(b).

An "act of God" is a natural event causing adverse economic consequences that, because of its rarity, time intensity, magnitude, location, duration, and/or time of occurrence, was not reasonably foreseeable. An act of God requires something more than an ordinary natural occurrence at the time and place involved, and its adverse consequences must not be primarily attributable to anyone's negligence.

Where a construction contractor's site was damaged by water runoff from another contractor's construction site (1) in the context of a general rainstorm exceeding the 100-year level; (2) where even the finished overall project as designed would not be protected beyond the 100-year storm level; (3) where damage to the first contractor's site probably would have occurred even if the second contractor were not contributorily negligent; (4) where the second contractor was not proved to be negligent in its construction methods under the circumstances; and (5) where there is evidence that the first contractor was at least as negligent as the second contractor may have been in causing the damage, the rainstorm was an act of God, and the first contractor is not entitled to recover its clean-up costs; and if the Government chooses to indemnify the first contractor for these costs, it does so as a volunteer and not because it was liable for such costs under SF 23-A.

Interest

Where a contract settlement arrived at pursuant to a termination for the convenience of the Government expressly omits any provision for the payment of interest on the amount of the agreement, the contractor is entitled to interest on the settlement amount from the date of its certification of the claim until the date payment of the settlement amount is made, notwithstanding the provisions of 41 CFR 1-8.212-2(c) (1981) and subsequent similar provisions which preclude interest on normal termination settlements.

Power City Construction, Inc., IBCA-1839 (Mar. 12, 1986) 93 I.D. 131

A Government motion to dismiss an appeal for lack of jurisdiction on the ground that the contractor had failed to certify the claim to the contracting officer as required by the Contract Disputes Act is denied where the Board finds that after the appeal was taken appellant did substantially comply with the requirements of the Act by certifying the claim in the manner required and presenting the claim so certified to the contracting officer in the course of settlement discussions who advised appellant that it was only entitled to the amount found to be due in the decision previously rendered on the uncertified claim. Interest on any amount determined to be due appellant on its claims is to be computed from the date the claims were found to have been properly certified to the contracting officer.

Appeal of Salisbury & Dietz, Inc., IBCA-2090 (June 20, 1986) 93 I.D. 250

On the basis of the legislative history of the Contract Disputes Act and controlling case law, the Board rejects the notion that interest is payable on contractor claims only when an underlying dispute exists, but concludes that something more than a simple invoice and the passage of time is required for interest to accrue on contract obligations. The claim must be a demand for payment in a specific amount, and the CO must be given an adequate basis for making a decision.

The Board finds no fault with the definition of "claim" in the Disputes clause of the Federal Acquisition Regulations, since it is consistent with the dictionary definition of the word and thus can be presumed to be in accord with the intent of the Contract Disputes Act. However, because the FAR explanatory material and previous versions of the regulation have caused considerable confusion, the Board adopts the definition of "claim" recently set forth by the Federal Circuit Appeals Court in Contract Cleaning Maintenance, Inc. v. United States, 811 F.2d 586 (Fed. Cir. 1987).

Interest, on contractor claims ultimately allowed, accrues from the date, subsequent to the date of the initial billing, when the CO receives a clear and unequivocal demand in writing for a specific amount that sets forth an adequate basis for the amount sought, provided that the CO has previously had a reasonable opportunity to act on the initial billing.

A claim for interest under the Contract Disputes Act from the date a certified request for an equitable adjustment is received is denied, where the Board finds (i) that the letter containing the certification was an invitation to the Government to negotiate on the amount of equitable adjustment to be provided; (ii) that the letter did not constitute "a written demand" by the contractor, "seeking, as a matter of right, the payment of money in a sum certain"; and (iii) that the letter did not constitute the submission of a claim to the contracting officer for a decision on which interest would be payable from the date of receipt to the payment thereof.

A number of appeals are dismissed and remanded to the contracting officer for a decision following the completion of the auditing process where the Board found that a purportedly final decision of the contracting officer was not a final decision within the meaning of sec. 6(a) of the Contract Disputes Act. The Board noted that neither the contracting officer's decision nor the audit report on which it was based identified the contracts or grants involved in the dispute with the result that no attempt had been made by either the auditor or the contracting officer to allocate disallowed costs to individual contracts or grants. Claims arising under or related to grants were dismissed with prejudice as outside the purview of the Board's jurisdiction.

Where by the terms of a Government contract the Board lacks authority over any dispute arising out of the contract's labor provisions, the Board has determined as a matter of policy that it will normally exercise jurisdiction over other labor-related matters in the same contract only to the extent that they arise primarily from causes other than the labor standards provisions.

Where the Bureau of Reclamation, in a solicitation of bids for construction of pipelines and agricultural drain structures, and for enlarging an existing open channel wasteway, included in its solicitation and contract documents a photocopy of a general Federal Register wage determination, containing footnotes to the effect that 20-percent lower wage rates were permissible in connection with utility projects, and the contracting officer merely marked the footnotes with arrows properly indicating the textual paragraphs to which the notes applied, the contractor's conclusion that the agency was representing the project to be a utility project was a unilateral mistake on his part for which the agency was not responsible. To the extent that he believed that the footnotes were ambiguous, it was the contractor's responsibility to make inquiry of the Labor Department in order to clarify the matter before bidding, not after the contract was let.

Moreover, if a contractor is mistaken in his interpretation of the job-classification standards, or if he believes them to be in any way erroneous or ambiguous, his only recourse lies with the Labor Department. The contracting agency has no authority and little ability to clarify the Labor Department's wage determinations. definition of the word and thus can be presumed to be in accord with the intent of the Contract Disputes Act. However, because the FAR explanatory material and previous versions of the regulation have caused considerable confusion, the Board adopts the definition of "claim" recently set forth by the Federal Circuit Appeals Court in Contract Cleaning Maintenance, Inc. v. United States, 811 F.2d 586 (Fed. Cir. 1987).

Interest, on contractor claims ultimately allowed, accrues from the date, subsequent to the date of the initial billing, when the CO receives a clear and unequivocal demand in writing for a specific amount that sets forth an adequate basis for the amount sought, provided that the CO has previously had a reasonable opportunity to act on the initial billing.

Appeal of A & J Construction Co., Inc., IBCA-2269
(June 29, 1987) 94 I.D. 211

Consistent with its prior decisions, the Board refuses to adopt a narrow or purely technical view of the claim certification requirement of the Contract Disputes Act, concluding that the purpose of the requirement was to avoid or reduce frivolous claims, not to impose purely mechanical requirements on the contract disputes process. Accordingly, it rejects the notion that a contractor's certification in the prescribed format becomes inefficacious merely because it incorporates by reference an adequate previous submission of claim documents and computations which lacked only the necessary certification in order to become a valid CDA claim.

The granting by the Board of a motion for dismissal or for summary judgment made by one party requires only that the Board assume the truth of the facts being asserted by the other party. It does not require that the Board accept either the theory of the case or the statement of the law being urged by that party. Nor, in the case of an affidavit, is the Board bound to assume that the facts as alleged by the affiant are true when there is substantial evidence to the contrary and the affiant's assertions are merely conclusory.

Although oral modifications of Government contracts may be valid in some instances, such contract modifications normally must be reduced to writing; and they are generally not effective until the writing has been executed by both parties. There is no legal presumption that a valid settlement agreement has been entered into merely because the parties at a negotiation session generally arrive at a meeting of the minds, and the party asserting the existence of a purely oral contract modification bears a heavy burden of proof that a valid modification has occurred.

A&J Construction Co., Inc. (Application for Attorney Fees), IBCA-2376-F (Feb. 4, 1988)

The Board finds there is no statutory entitlement to interest on amounts claimed due under proposals for adjustment of the contract price under the Prompt Payment Act because under the circumstances, despite long delays before the proposals were incorporated into the contract, there were no proper invoices or required payment dates as specified in the Prompt Payment Act, and the proposals never became claims within the meaning of the Contract Disputes Act.

Appeal of Columbia Engineering Corp., IBCA-2322
(Apr. 21, 1989)

Under the Prompt Payment Act no interest is payable on an agreed upon equitable adjustment for a change until a modification reflecting the agreement between the parties has increased the contract price, since prior to that time there was neither a proper invoice nor a required payment date as specified in the Prompt Payment Act.

A claim for interest under the Contract Disputes Act from the date a certified request for an equitable adjustment is received is denied, where the Board finds (i) that the letter containing the certification was an invitation to the Government to negotiate on the amount of equitable adjustment to be provided; (ii) that the letter did not constitute "a written demand" by the contractor, "seeking, as a matter of right, the payment of money in a sum certain"; and (iii) that the letter did not constitute the submission of a claim to the contracting officer for a decision on which interest would be payable from the date of receipt to the payment thereof.

Appeals

A number of appeals arising from the Government's claim of a contractor's indebtedness to the Government under a purported final decision of the contracting officer are dismissed for want of jurisdiction because the decision of the contracting officer is found to lack finality where the contractor was denied resources to respond to audit questions, the contracting officer failed to schedule audit responses as promised, the purported decision prevented discussions of the parties to reach an impasse, and the decision falls short of the required standard of the impartiality and quasi-judicial attitude of a contracting officer.

Appeals of Husky Oil NPR Operations, Inc., IBCA-1871 et al. (Feb. 15, 1985) 92 I.D. 91

A number of appeals are dismissed and remanded to the contracting officer for a decision following the completion of the auditing process where the Board found that a purportedly final decision of the contracting officer was not a final decision within the meaning of sec. 6(a) of the Contract Disputes Act. The Board noted that neither the contracting officer's decision nor the audit report on which it was based identified the contracts or grants involved in the dispute with the result that no attempt had been made by either the auditor or the contracting officer to allocate disallowed costs to individual contracts or grants. Claims arising under or related to grants were dismissed with prejudice as outside the purview of the Board's jurisdiction.

Appeals of Fort Mojave Indian Tribe of Arizona, California, & Nevada, IBCA-1968 - 1988 (June 7, 1985) 92 I.D. 255

A Government counterclaim is found not to be before the Board for decision where the failure of the contracting officer to advise the contractor of the Government claims and afford the contractor an opportunity to respond to them before proceeding with the issuance of his decision was considered to deprive the decision of finality.

An appeal under a timber sales contract is granted where the Board finds a contractor to have been relieved of his slash burning obligations by reason of the Government having improperly deferred the burning of the slash generated under appellant's contract until such slash could be burned simultaneously with slash generated under another timber sales contract awarded at a later date to someone else.

Appeal of James L. Patten d.b.a. James Patten Logging, IBCA-1873 (Apr. 29, 1985) 92 I.D. 172

In a cost-plus-fixed-fee level of effort contract with task order options held by the Government, the contractor had the burden to prove: (1) that it gave the proper notice and received authorization from the contracting officer, under the Limitation of Costs Clause, before it could recover for any foreseeable overrun; (2) that the Government, in delaying performance of the contract, had breached a contract obligation, which breach caused increased costs, in order to recover increased overhead and general and administrative costs above the contract ceiling for delays as an equitable adjustment for an implied change arising, de facto, under the Stop Work Order Clause; (3) that the Government had an obligation to exercise options in order for the contractor to recover any amounts for failure to exercise such options. Where the contractor waited until after performance was complete to invoice for amounts in excess of contract limitations and had earlier agreed to a change accomplishing an increase of costs limitation as covering all performance, it could not and did not carry its burden for compensable overrun; where it waited over 6 years to make a claim, failed to present auditable cost records at any time, relied on the mere existence of delays to establish a Government breach and failed to connect any alleged breach to specific cost increases, it failed to carry its burden of proving delays amounting to a breach such as would allow recovery for an equitable adjustment for expenses in excess of contract ceilings as a de facto stop under the Stop Work Order clause; where it presented mere allegations of fraud and malevolence in Government motivation and conduct but failed to present proof of the allegations nor even of what they meant, it failed to carry its burden to show that the Government had some obligation to exercise contract options. The appeal was denied.

Appeal of Optimal Data Corp., IBCA-1695 (June 20, 1985) 92 I.D. 269

A contractor's claim for an equitable adjustment based upon delays incurred as a result of the Government's application of alleged restrictive specifications, was denied where the Government made a prima facie showing that the specifications relating to dam construction equipment reasonably related to its needs, and the contractor failed to meet its burden that such requirements unduly restricted the use of commercially manufactured equipment or required the fabrication of special equipment to perform the work.

In-Line Construction, IBCA-1909 (Dec. 19, 1985)

Except for correction of a mathematical error in the contracting officer's decision, a contractor's claim for additional settlement costs under an architect-engineer contract terminated for the convenience of the Government is denied, where the appellant failed to show by a preponderance of the evidence that a sub-mission schedule contained in the contract should not be used in determining the amount of the termination settlement to which the contractor is entitled. The appellant also failed to substantiate the amount claimed as subcontractor settlement costs.

FKW, Inc., IBCA-1942 (Jan. 23, 1986)

When the parties differ as to the amount payable as an equitable adjustment for overrun quantities of soil-cement for slope protection placed on the embankment portion of a dam and when the principal item on which the parties are apart involves equipment costs, the Board finds that the appellant has failed to show that it is entitled to any greater amount than was allowed by the contracting officer where (i) information as to the cost of contractor-owned equipment was available in the contractor's records; (ii) such information was not furnished to the Government at the time of the audit of the contractor's books or at any time thereafter; (iii) instead of furnishing its costs for contractor-owned equipment, the appellant chose to rely upon a construction guideline for costing such equipment (a lot of which was fully depreciated) despite the fact that the guidelines relied upon specifically state that they should not be used for construction such as dams, highways, and bridges; (iv) by reason of the appellant's failure to furnish its costs for contractor-owned equipment, the Board was unable to apply the standards set forth in FPR 1-15.205-9 to determine the amount to which the appellant was entitled; and (v) the comparisons made by the project engineer to which he testified support the amount allowed by the contracting officer as an equitable adjustment.

CONTRACTS--Continued

Under a contract for the construction of a dam requiring that, except for the initial layer, all layers of soil-cement slope protection be placed in lifts 8 feet wide, the contractor sought an equitable adjustment on the ground that by reason of safety it had been necessary to place the soil-cement in 9-foot-wide lifts since it would have been dangerous to attempt to maneuver its 8-foot-wide dump trucks so as to keep them on the 8-foot-wide soil-cement layers during the laydown operation and, in any event, it would have been virtually impossible to do so since the soil-cement layers themselves and the semi-pervious portion of the inclined bank were either slippery or slick. In denying the claim, the Board found that the appellant had failed to prove its claim by a preponderance of the evidence. Supporting the denial were the Board's findings (i) that the specification requirement that the soil-cement layers be placed in 8-foot lifts did not create a condition which was hazardous per se since it was contemplated that the contractor would use part of the slope of the dam for the inside wheels of the dump trucks in the placing procedure; (ii) that this was common practice in laying a soil-cement slope; (iii) that during the laydown operation the dump trucks used in placing the soil-cement consistently had at least their outer tires on the semi-pervious portion of the slope leaving a foot or so of space between the outside duals and the edge of the soil-cement lifts on the reservoir side; (iv) that while the project engineer knew that the contractor was placing and to some extent compacting soil-cement outside the 8-foot width shown on the plans, he attributed that to the fact that the contractor did not have the equipment to provide edge control for 8-foot widths; and (v) that with careful experienced drivers, the placement of soil-cement in 8-foot-wide lifts was a relatively safe operation.

In connection with its findings, the Board notes that while appellant's witnesses concerned with operation testified that the soil-cement layers and the semi-pervious portion of the inclined bank were slippery or slick at least most of the time, there is no evidence of record showing that at any time during the contract performance the appellant characterized either of the two surfaces (the soil-cement layers or the semi-pervious portion of the inclined bank) as slippery or slick.

A claim against a contractor for damages asserted under the Termination For Default--Damages For Delay--Time Extension Clause is sustained when the contractor failed or refused to complete the work covered by a mop-up and fireline services contract and the amount charged against the contractor for completion of the work remaining with Government forces represents a reasonable measure of the damages sustained by the Government as a result of the contractor's failure to complete the contract work.

Appeal of Champion Timberland Services, Inc., IBCA-2061 (Feb. 28, 1986)

to suspect that a bid mistake had been made; the Board holds: that the contractor has failed to sustain its burden of proof to establish entitlement to relief from the mistake, since the law is well settled that a notice of award is effective on the date mailed--if mailing is permitted by the bid document--constitutes an acceptance of an offer, and results in a binding contract; while a notice of mistake in bid and request for withdrawal constitutes an attempt to withdraw an offer to form a contract, or rescind a contract already made, and is not effective until received by the offeree--the contracting officer.

Singleton Contracting Corp., IBCA-1770-1-84 (Mar. 6, 1986) 93 I.D. 127

A contractor's claim for an equitable adjustment for work performed during construction of a canal siphon is denied, where the contractor failed to show that a conflict existed between the contract drawings and specifications with respect to the design grade and joint spacing of siphon piping, or that the Government directed the contractor to maintain the joint spacing of the pipe at the expense of maintaining the pipe grade requirement.

Appeal of Western Contracting Corp., IBCA-1961 (Mar. 6, 1986)

A Government purchase order is merely an offer to purchase and does not become a contract until accepted by the contractor. The burden is on the contractor to prove acceptance by substantial performance. Where a purchase order contemplates the immediate repair of an electric motor needed for ongoing construction, under emergency circumstances known to the repairer, acceptance consists in the actual performance of the needed repairs; and the Government is not liable for any labor or material costs incurred if the repairs are not timely or successfully performed and the Government derives no benefit from the unsuccessful repairer's efforts.

Appeal of J & C Electric Motor Service, IBCA-2064 (Apr. 17, 1986)

Mere allegations by a contractor that a BLM inspector ordered the performance of extra work in connection with a contract for the hand-piling of timber slash on Government forest lands are not sufficient to justify additional compensation where the Government inspector denies that he went beyond the contract specifications and the contractor offers no probative evidence in support of his allegations. The burden is on the contractor to timely notify the contracting officer of the alleged change in work requirements and to prove that the extra work being claimed was actually done.

Appeal of Dace Cochran, IBCA-1799 (May 23, 1986)

A claim for an equitable adjustment was denied where a contractor, engaged in the construction of a pipe trench for the spillway portion of a dam project, failed to demonstrate that during the cleanup phase of the excavation work, that Government inspectors directed the contractor to overexcavate beyond the neat lines required by the contract, or that material loosened during such excavation was "unsuitable" within the meaning of the specifications, as to require further excavation and placement of backfill concrete. Rather, the evidence indicated that the majority of overexcavation at the site was the result of excavation procedures determined to be for the convenience of the contractor, and thus, noncompensable under the terms of the contract.

Appeal of Claterbos, Inc., IBCA-1726-9-83 (July 30, 1986)

Where a contract clause is not ambiguous but merely unspecific in a particular respect, it must be construed in light of other provisions and the general purpose of the contract. If the contractor urges an interpretation inconsistent with that general purpose, it has the burden of proving that its interpretation is what the parties intended.

Where a standard contract clause in a road construction contract provides that all merchantable timber in the clearing area shall become the property of the contractor, but the Government terminates the contract for its convenience shortly after the contract commences, the contractor's claim for the timber in addition to its costs and a reasonable profit on the work completed, on the theory that title to the timber had vested in it at the inception of the contract, is without merit. It is entitled only to what the termination for convenience clause contemplates, since that clause governs.

Appeal of North Central Construction, Inc., IBCA-1908 (Aug. 13, 1986)

In the absence of any proof by a contracting officer that he notified a building maintenance contractor at the time they occurred of alleged janitorial deficiencies leading up to a termination of the contract for default, the contractor is entitled to payment for its services up until the date of the termination even if it does not challenge the default termination as such.

Upon finding that the contractor's refusal to proceed was a conditional, rather than an unconditional, manifestation of nonperformance, when the contractor remained at the site awaiting clarification or direction on how to proceed under technical specifications, the Board holds that the Government failed to sustain its burden of proving alleged abandonment by not proving words or conduct on the part of the contractor manifesting a positive, unequivocal, and unconditional intent not to perform the contract in any event or at any time.

Appeal of James W. Sprayberry Construction, IBCA-2130
(Mar. 6, 1987) 94 I.D. 45

Where, in a reroofing project, the Board found that the contractor's measurements and calculations were corroborated and more meticulously done than were the Government's, the Board held that the contractor sustained its burden of proof by a preponderance of the evidence with respect to the claims involving reshingling and the application of a foam roofing system.

Appeal of Singleton Contracting Corp., IBCA-1838
(June 29, 1987)

In denying a request by appellant that the testimony of a project engineer on a Government project for the construction of a dam be disregarded as in conflict with an entry in the project diary made by an inspector, the Board noted that there appeared to be a reasonable basis for reconciling the purportedly conflicting evidence but that in any event there was an obligation to confront the project engineer with the diary entry at the hearing, if, after the record was closed, appellant was to rely upon the diary entry to discredit the testimony given by the project engineer.

Serious deficiencies in the records maintained by appellant are found by the Board where: (i) amounts paid to personnel involved in general supervision were charged to direct costs rather than to overhead in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles; (ii) some of the time cards relied upon to support claimed labor costs were neither signed nor initialed by anyone in a supervisory capacity; (iii) there is no indication that the daily construction progress reports of the contract were kept in bound volumes; (iv) the records of the contractor failed to systematically distinguish between work required by the contract and claim work; and (v) overhead and profit are claimed on equipment costs even though presumably those items have been included in the equipment rates used by appellant in computing the amounts of the various claims. The Board also finds (i) that the entries of the project engineer in the project diary were recorded in bound volumes; (ii) that such diaries were superior in both content and form to the daily construction reports of the contractor; and (iii) that the records maintained by the project engineer in other areas (including those pertaining to quantity measurements) were superior to comparable records maintained by appellant.

In an appeal involving the construction of a dam, a claim for the cost of modifying and repairing a return channel is denied, where the evidence shows that all of the costs involved would have been unnecessary if the return channel had been properly constructed in the first place.

A dispute between the parties as to whether appellant has been paid the unit prices shown in a unilateral change order for the excavation of timber cribbing and the placement of compacted backfill is resolved by the Board finding that payment is an affirmative defense and that the Government has failed to carry its burden of showing that payment of the disputed sums were in fact made in this case.

A claim for the placement of sheet piling under a contract for the construction of a dam is denied, where the testimony of the project engineer that the contractor had proposed furnishing the sheet piling for its convenience is corroborated by a contemporaneous entry in the project diary and the testimony of appellant's vice president to the contrary is uncorroborated.

A claim for additional costs incurred in placing a clay seal and performing other work related to preparation of the upstream apron foundation is denied, where the Board finds that the work covered by the claim stemmed from the flouting by appellant of the specification requirement that where concrete is to be placed on any excavated surface special care shall be taken not to disturb the bottom of the excavation more than necessary and that faced with the prospect of being required to remove all of the disturbed material in the area of the upstream apron and replace the same with concrete to the planned grade at the contractor's expense, the contractor opted to accept the clay-seal alternative and agreed to perform under such alternative at no additional cost to the Government.

Appellant's monetary claim for winter heat and cover and a related claim for a time extension are denied where the principal contention advanced by appellant is that the claim resulted from the cumulative effect of delays attributable to the Government which pushed the actual construction work into the cold weather months but as to which the Board finds that the delays are concurrent and that the appellant has failed to show the delays attributed to the Government are apart from the delays for which the contractor was responsible.

Appeal of Volk Construction, Inc., IBCA-1419-1-81 et al. (June 30, 1987)

Where, under a requirement, fixed-price contract for photographic materials and services to be furnished by the contractor to the Government, the contractor failed to deliver the first six purchase orders, the Board denied claimed entitlement to a conversion of a termination for default to a termination for convenience, since the contractor failed to produce any credible evidence in support of its allegations, and since the principal assertion of the right to such conversion, that the supplier for the contractor failed to perform, does not, as a matter of law, constitute excusable cause for delay.

Appeal of Logan Cartographic Services, IBCA-2287A (Aug. 26, 1987)

A contract for construction of a fish hatchery nursery facility was properly terminated for default where the evidence showed that the contractor's work contained numerous performance deficiencies; that the contractor failed to make required submittals; and failed to remedy such deficiencies within a reasonable cure period. The record contained no basis for concluding that the contractor's failure to perform was excusable. Under such circumstances, the Government was within its rights to terminate the contract for default.

A contractor's request for an equitable adjustment for additional contract time due to alleged unusually severe weather was denied, where the contractor failed to prove that rainfall at the project site was unusually heavy for the time and place at which it occurred, or that there was some nexus between the weather conditions encountered and the contractor's inability to perform in timely fashion.

A contractor's claim that it was entitled to damages due to the Government's alleged breach of contract, was denied where the evidence failed to support the contractor's allegations that the Government administered the contract in an arbitrary and capricious manner, and failed to allow the

A contractor was found to be entitled to an equitable adjustment for excess costs allegedly incurred during performance of site restoration work, where it failed to show that the Government's technical project officer (TPO), who oversaw performance of the work, arbitrarily or capriciously withheld her approval of such work, or that any directive issued by the TPO exceeded industry standards or was beyond the scope of the contract requirements.

After thorough reconsideration and reanalysis of its original decision, pursuant to BECO's four specifications of error, the Board finds that it did not err as alleged; confirms its original decision; and concludes that the principal reasons for appellant's failure to achieve higher recovery for its claims on appeal were: (1) failure to articulate and define the terms of the prehearing quantum stipulation and (2) failure to adduce

The denials are based on the contractor's failure to sustain its burden of proof with respect to entitlement, quantum, or both, by application of fundamental legal tenets, including the following: that to prove a claim, a contractor has the burden of not only establishing entitlement by a preponderance of substantial evidence, but also of supporting the quantum aspect of the claim by substantial, probative, and reliable evidence; that mere allegations or restatements of the amount claimed do not constitute proof and do not sustain that burden; that, to prevail, a contractor must show a consideration between the alleged extra contract work and the costs claimed.

extended to the date of beneficial occupancy. The Government estimated that 5 percent of the contract work remained at beneficial occupancy, which made that event the equivalent of substantial completion. A contractor's claim for additional compensation on the basis of changed site conditions will be denied where the sole basis for the claim is unanticipated costs allegedly incurred by the contractor as a result of a County decision to enforce existing vehicle weight restrictions that precluded the use of premixed concrete trucks on the only access road to the project site. It is immaterial whether the Government's own actions may have precipitated the County's enforcement decision. Liquidated damages are properly assessed when the contract provision authorizing their assessment is reasonable, and the contractor fails to show that the delay in the completion of the work arose from unforeseeable causes beyond its control and without fault or negligence on its part.

Costs incurred for additional amounts of grouting and concrete required to seal fractured rock encountered during installation of ground anchors during an emergency residential subsidence project, were not compensable because the specifications contained in the contract were not defective and the contractor was responsible for choosing suitable construction methods. The contractor claimed entitlement to an equitable adjustment for such additional work and costs on the grounds that: (1) it was not provided relative boring data prior to award in order to determine subsurface conditions; (2) that the specifications were defective in that there was insufficient time involved in the bidding process to conduct an adequate subsurface site investigation; (3) that it encountered unexpected rock fractures which resulted in overruns of concrete and grout; and (4) that such conditions necessitated extra work to conform to the requirements of the contract. However, the contractor failed to sustain its burden of proof that the Government withheld relevant boring information, and the evidence demonstrated that the excess costs incurred were not the result of any defect in the specifications but pertained to those aspects of the work for which the contractor bore responsibility.

The Board holds that a constructive change occurred, entitling a timber sale purchaser to an equitable adjustment for unanticipated extra costs, upon finding: that a Government-owned aggregate stockpile, designated as a suitable source for road work required to be performed by the purchaser, proved to be inadequate; that the purchaser had relied on the availability of such source for his performance of the contract; and that it was reasonable for him, under the existing conditions, to then incur extra costs in order to obtain the necessary aggregate from a commercial pit.

Finding that the specification was aimed at protecting an old wooden flume used to irrigate about 2,300 acres of valuable orchard lands, and that damage to the flume could easily have jeopardized the entire project objective and wasted thousands of construction cost dollars, the Board also holds, in the circumstances, that the Bureau of Reclamation did not abuse or unreasonably exercise its discretion by first imposing the restriction and later relaxing it when satisfied the flume would not be damaged.

A contractor's claim for an equitable adjustment based upon delays incurred as a result of the Government's application of alleged restrictive specifications, was denied where the Government made a prima facie showing that the specifications relating to dam construction equipment reasonably related to its needs, and the contractor failed to meet its burden that such requirements unduly restricted the use of commercially manufactured equipment or required the fabrication of special equipment to perform the work.

A contractor was found not to be eligible for an equitable adjustment based upon a Category I differing site condition, because the contract documents failed to offer any indications regarding site conditions, and thus, there was no basis upon which the contractor could have relied in preparing its bid.

Where the record indicates that the components contained in Government-designated borrow material were neither unusual, unknown or materially different from what the contractor should have expected, but rather allegedly contained an inordinate amount of moisture due to rain and snowfall, the contractor's claim for an equitable adjustment, based on a Category II differing site condition is denied, given the long-standing rule that weather conditions do not constitute a valid basis for a differing site conditions claim.

have encountered a Category I differing site condition which caused delays in contract performance.

In a case involving a dispute over the amount of soil-cement slope protection placed on the embankment portion of a dam in which the appellant relies upon a survey made by a professional land surveyor and the BIA upon a survey performed by the project engineer (a registered professional engineer), the Board accepts the BIA survey as determinative of the quantity of soil-cement placed on the embankment where it finds (i) the BIA survey had been performed at an earlier time when conditions prevailing were more conducive to accurate measurements being taken and (ii) the records maintained with respect to the BIA survey appeared to be free of the internal inconsistencies shown to be present in the survey records of the licensed land surveyor.

When the parties differ as to the amount payable as an equitable adjustment for overrun quantities of soil-cement for slope protection placed on the embankment portion of a dam and when the principal item on which the parties are apart involves equipment costs, the Board finds that the appellant has failed to show that it is entitled to any greater amount than was allowed by the contracting officer where (i) information as to the cost of contractor-owned equipment was available in the contractor's records; (ii) such information was not furnished to the Government at the time of the audit of the contractor's books or at any time thereafter; (iii) instead of furnishing its costs for contractor-owned equipment, the appellant chose to rely upon a construction guideline for costing such equipment (a lot of which was fully depreciated) despite the fact that the guidelines relied upon specifically state that they should not be used for construction such as dams, highways, and bridges; (iv) by reason of the appellant's failure to furnish its costs for contractor-owned equipment, the Board was unable to apply the standards set forth in FPR 1-15.205-9 to determine the amount to which the appellant was entitled; and (v) the comparisons made by the project engineer to which he testified support the amount allowed by the contracting officer as an equitable adjustment.

Under a contract for the construction of a dam requiring that, except for the initial layer, all layers of soil-cement slope protection be placed in lifts 8 feet wide, the contractor sought an equitable adjustment on the ground that by reason of safety it had been necessary to place the soil-cement in 9-foot-wide lifts since it would have been dangerous to attempt to maneuver its 8-foot-wide dump trucks so as to keep them on the 8-foot-wide soil-cement layers during the laydown operation and, in any event, it would have been virtually impossible to do so since the soil-cement layers themselves and the semi-pervious portion of the inclined bank were either slippery or slick. In denying the claim, the Board found that the appellant had failed to prove its claim by a preponderance of the evidence. Supporting the denial were the Board's findings (i) that the specification requirement that the soil-cement layers be placed in 8-foot lifts did not create a condition which was hazardous per se since it was contemplated that the contractor would use part of the slope of the dam for the inside wheels of the dump trucks in the placing procedure; (ii) that this was common practice in laying a soil-cement slope; (iii) that during the laydown operation the dump trucks used in placing the soil-cement consistently had at least their outer tires on the semi-pervious portion of the slope leaving a foot or so of space between the outside duals and the edge of the soil-cement lifts on the reservoir side; (iv) that while the project engineer knew that the contractor was placing and to some extent compacting soil-cement outside the 8-foot width shown on the plans, he attributed that to the fact that the contractor did not have the equipment to provide edge control for 8-foot widths; and (v) that with careful experienced drivers, the placement of soil-cement in 8-foot-wide lifts was a relatively safe operation.

In connection with its findings, the Board notes that while appellant's witnesses concerned with operation testified that the soil-cement layers and the semi-pervious portion of the inclined bank were slippery or slick at least most of the time, there is no evidence of record showing that at any time during the contract performance the appellant characterized either of the two surfaces (the soil-cement layers or Serious deficiencies in the records maintained by appellant are found by the Board where: (i) amounts paid to personnel involved in general supervision were charged to direct costs rather than to overhead in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles; (ii) some of the time cards relied upon to support claimed labor costs were neither signed nor initialed by anyone in a supervisory capacity; (iii) there is no indication that the daily construction progress reports of the contract were kept in bound volumes; (iv) the records of the contractor failed to systematically distinguish between work required by the contract and claim work; and (v) overhead and profit are claimed on equipment costs even though presumably those items have been included in the equipment rates used by appellant in computing the amounts of the various claims. The Board also finds (i) that the entries of the project engineer in the project diary were recorded in bound volumes; (ii) that such diaries were superior in both content and form to the daily construction reports of the contractor; and (iii) that the records maintained by the project engineer in other areas (including those pertaining to quantity measurements) were superior to comparable records maintained by appellant.

Contractors performing work under a clearing contract were not entitled to an equitable adjustment for having encountered substantial quantities of rock outcroppings which required additional hand clearing, where a full, pre-bid site investigation would have disclosed the presence of such visible rock conditions. The contractors based their bid on partial investigations of the project area, and on statements by a Government inspector, which the Board held did not misrepresent conditions at the site. The contractors sought to excuse their failure to inspect the entire project area on the grounds that the terrain was difficult to traverse, was covered with briars, and infested with snakes. A contractor was found to be entitled to an equitable adjustment for excess costs allegedly incurred during performance of site restoration work, where it failed to show that the Government's technical project officer (TPO), who oversaw performance of the work, arbitrarily or capriciously withheld her approval of such work, or that any directive issued by the TPO exceeded industry standards or was beyond the scope of the contract requirements.

Appeal of Geo-Con, Inc., IBCA-2195, 2196 (Mar. 14, 1989)

A contract modification resulting in a deductive change to a firm, fixed-price contract is priced on the basis of its effect on the contractor, not on the basis of its apparent value to the Government. Thus, where two Government-leased helicopters, each having its own mechanic, are subsequently based at the same location, the Government may not simply unilaterally eliminate one mechanic by contract modification and commensurate deduction, and require the other mechanic to maintain both helicopters, regardless of the fact that the contractor may still have to pay the eliminated mechanic.

Where, under an Automatic Data Processing contract, the Government failed to secure either a Delegation of Procurement Authority from the General Services Administration, or obtain other Departmental authority prior to the issuance of numerous contract modifications, and the contract contained possible illegal provisions, the contractor was nevertheless entitled to recover wrongfully withheld progress payments on a quantum meruit basis. The Board found that the contractor had conferred a benefit on the Government which it had accepted, and the progress payments due appellant represented the reasonable value of such benefits.

Jurisdiction

A number of appeals arising from the Government's claim of a contractor's indebtedness to the Government under a purported final decision of the contracting officer are dismissed for want of jurisdiction because the decision of the contracting officer is found to lack finality where the contractor was denied resources to respond to audit questions, the contracting officer failed to schedule audit responses as promised, the purported decision prevented discussions of the parties to reach an impasse, and the decision falls short of the required standard of the impartiality and quasi-judicial attitude of a contracting officer.

In a case where an Indian tribe moves to dismiss appeals for lack of jurisdiction in the Board where the Government claims for repayment of disallowed costs under cost-reimbursement contracts, the Board finds the Contract Disputes Act of 1978 to be inapplicable to contracts awarded under Public Law 93-638, but finds the Board has jurisdiction under a delegation of authority from the Secretary and the agreement of the parties under a disputes clause in the contracts. The claim of sovereign immunity by the tribe is found to relate to enforcement of any decision finding the tribe liable to the Government, and does not affect Board jurisdiction over the claims.

Where a contract clause is not ambiguous but merely unspecific in a particular respect, it must be construed in light of other provisions and the general purpose of the contract. If the contractor urges an interpretation inconsistent with that general purpose, it has the burden of proving that its interpretation is what the parties intended.

Where a standard contract clause in a road construction contract provides that all merchantable timber in the clearing area shall become the property of the contractor, but the Government terminates the contract for its convenience shortly after the contract commences, the contractor's claim for the timber in addition to its costs and a reasonable profit on the work completed, on the theory that title to the timber had vested in it at the inception of the contract, is without merit. ## FEDERAL PROCUREMENT REGULATIONS

Where by the terms of a Government contract the Board lacks authority over any dispute arising out of the contract's labor provisions, the Board has determined as a matter of policy that it will normally exercise jurisdiction over other labor-related matters in the same contract only to the extent that they arise primarily from causes other than the labor standards provisions.

Where the Bureau of Reclamation, in a solicitation of bids for construction of pipelines and agricultural drain structures, and for enlarging an existing open channel wasteway, included in its solicitation and contract documents a photocopy of a general Federal Register wage determination containing footnotes to the effect that 20-percent lower wage rates were permissible in connection with utility projects, and the contracting officer merely marked the footnotes with arrows properly indicating the textual paragraphs to which the notes applied, the contractor's conclusion that the agency was representing the project to be a utility project was a unilateral mistake on his part for which the agency was not responsible. To the extent that he believed that the footnotes were ambiguous, it was the contractor's responsibility to make inquiry of the Labor Department in order to clarify the matter before bidding, not after the contract was let.

A Government agency in its bid solicitation makes no representation as to the amount of wages a bidder will have to pay if it is awarded the contract. The job classification and wage-rate information set forth in contract documents specify only minimum rates, not maxima; and a contractor is not entitled to assume that the rates set forth are all that he will have to pay. Moreover, if a contractor is mistaken in his interpretation of the job-classification standards, or if he believes them to be in any way erroneous or ambiguous, his only recourse lies with the Labor Department. The contracting agency has no authority and little ability to clarify the Labor Department's wage determinations. The Board, on the basis of Binghamton and Collins, expressly rejects the notion that the contracting officer is primarily responsible for resolving job-classification, wage-cost, or other labor-related issues in response to bidders' concerns, even when such clarification is sought.

FORMATION AND VALIDITYGenerally

In a cost-plus-fixed-fee level of effort contract with task order options held by the Government, the contractor had the burden to prove: (1) that it gave the proper notice and received authorization from the contracting officer, under the Limitation of Costs Clause, before it could recover for any foreseeable overrun; (2) that the Government, in delaying performance of the contract, had breached a contract obligation, which breach caused increased costs, in order to recover increased overhead and general, and administrative costs above the contract ceiling for delays as an equitable adjustment for an implied change arising, de facto, under the Stop Work Order Clause; (3) that the Government had an obligation to exercise options in order for the contractor to recover any amounts for failure to exercise such options. Where the contractor waited until after performance was complete to invoice for amounts in excess of contract limitations and had earlier agreed to a change accomplishing an increase of costs limitation as covering all performance, it could not and did not carry its burden for compensable overrun; where it waited over 6 years to make a claim, failed to present auditable cost records at any time, relied on the mere existence of delays to establish a Government breach and failed to connect any alleged breach to specific cost increases, it failed to carry its burden of proving delays amounting to a breach such as would allow recovery for an equitable adjustment for expenses in excess of contract ceilings as a de facto stop under the Stop Work Order clause; where it presented mere allegations of fraud and malevolence in Government motivation and conduct but failed to present proof of the allegations nor even of what they meant, it failed

Authority to Make

BLM may properly require the holder of a special recreation use permit to pay an annual-use fee for commercial use of public lands in connection with a river rafting operation and limit deduction of off-site transportation expenses in the fee computation to those cases involving transportation of customers more than 200 miles one way.

Where BLM has established a policy of allowing a deduction for all off-site transportation expenses in the computation of the annual-use fee for commercial use of public lands in connection with a river rafting operation, it will not be permitted to retroactively amend that policy to restrict the deduction.

Where a contractor executes a contract which cites as the authority for its issuance one of two possible statutory provisions authorizing the making of such contracts, and the contractor fails to show that the cited statutory provision is not a proper authorization for the type of contract at issue, the Board refused (1) to consider parol evidence, to read unstated provisions into the contract, (2) to consider for the same purpose the contractor's reliance on the Government's statements of policy when those statements do not rise to the level of law, and (3) to consider the contractor's evidence that it complied with the prerequisites for issuance of the contract under the alternate authority (which would provide the contractor with a more favorable system of cost reimbursement) as grounds for deeming the contract to be issued under that alternate authority after the parties agreed to issuance of the contract under the cited authority.

Upon finding that a notice of award was signed by the contracting officer and mailed to the contractor on the same day that the contractor mailed a notice of mistake in bid, including a request to withdraw the bid, to the contracting officer; that both documents were received by the respective addressees on the same day, five days later; that the bid form provided for acceptance by mailing or otherwise furnished within a specified time; and that the contracting officer was in good faith accepting the bid and had no apparent reason to suspect that a bid mistake had been made; the Board holds: that the contractor has failed to sustain its burden of proof to establish entitlement to relief from the mistake, since the law is well settled that a notice of award is effective on the date mailed--if mailing is permitted by the bid document--constitutes an acceptance of an offer, and results in a binding contract; while a notice of mistake in bid and request for withdrawal constitutes an attempt to withdraw an offer to form a contract, or rescind a contract already utility project was a unilateral mistake on his part for which the agency was not responsible. To the extent that he believed that the footnotes were ambiguous, it was the contractor's responsibility to make inquiry of the Labor Department in order to clarify the matter before bidding, not after the contract was let.

Where the Bureau of Reclamation, in a solicitation of bids for construction of pipelines and agricultural drain structures, and for enlarging an existing open channel wasteway, included in its solicitation and contract documents a photocopy of a general Federal Register wage determination containing footnotes to the effect that 20-percent lower wage rates were permissible in connection with utility projects, and the contracting officer merely marked the footnotes with arrows properly indicating the textual paragraphs to which the notes applied, the contractor's conclusion that the agency was representing the project to be a

A Government agency in its bid solicitation makes no representation as to the amount of wages a bidder will have to pay if it is awarded the contract. The job classification and wage-rate information set forth in contract documents specify only minimum rates, not maxima; and a contractor is not entitled to assume that the rates set forth are all that he will have to pay. Moreover, if a contractor is mistaken in his interpretation of the job-classification standards, or if he believes them to be in any way erroneous or ambiguous, his only recourse lies with the Labor Department. The contracting agency has no authority and little ability to clarify the Labor Department's wage determinations. The Board, on the basis of Binghamton and Collins, expressly rejects the notion that the contracting officer is primarily responsible for resolving job-classification, wage-cost, or other labor-related issues in response to bidders' concerns, even when such clarification is sought.

Serious deficiencies in the records maintained by appellant are found by the Board where: (i) amounts paid to personnel involved in general supervision were charged to direct costs rather than to overhead in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles; (ii) some of the time cards relied upon to support claimed labor costs were neither signed nor initialed by anyone in a supervisory capacity; (iii) there is no indication that the daily construction progress reports of the contract were kept in bound volumes; (iv) the records of the contractor failed to systematically distinguish between work required by the contract and claim work; and (v) overhead and profit are claimed on equipment costs even though presumably those items have been included in the equipment rates used by appellant in computing the amounts of the various claims. The Board also finds (i) that the entries of the project engineer in the project diary were recorded in bound volumes; (ii) that such diaries were superior in both content and form to the daily construction reports of the contractor; and (iii) that the records maintained by the project engineer in other areas (including those pertaining to quantity measurements) were superior to comparable records maintained by appellant.

In a case where the Government admitted liability for the removal of timber cribbing below elevation 2317 in the construction of a dam and for its replacement with compacted backfill but where the parties disagree on both the amount of cribbing excavated and compacted backfill placed, as well as on the prices payable therefore, the Board substantially accepts the systematic measurements of the project engineer as to the quantities of cribbing excavated and backfill placed but finds that the unit prices to which the contractor is entitled by way of an equitable adjustment for the disputed items are much greater than the unit prices proposed by the contracting officer in a unilateral change order. The 101-day time extension requested by appellant for performance of the work is found by the Board to be greatly overstated, however, with the Board finding a 20-day time extension to be warranted by the evidence.

Under a contract for the construction of a dam, a claim for the amount of dewatering said to have been directed in excess of contract requirements is denied where the Board finds that two of the specification provisions pertaining to the placement of concrete where water is present were directly conflicting and therefore patently ambiguous and that the failure of appellant to make inquiry of the contracting officer prior to bidding resulted in the ambiguous contract provisions being interpreted against appellant.

A claim for additional costs incurred in placing a clay seal and performing other work related to preparation of the upstream apron foundation is denied, where the Board finds that the work covered by the claim stemmed from the flouting by appellant of the specification requirement that where concrete is to be placed on any excavated surface special care shall be taken not to disturb the bottom of the excavation more than necessary and that faced with the prospect of being required to remove all of the disturbed material in the area of the upstream apron and replace the same with concrete to the planned grade at the contractor's expense, the contractor opted to accept the clay-seal alternative and agreed to perform under such alternative at no additional cost to the Government.

CONTRACTS--ContinuedINDIAN SELF-DETERMINATION AND EDUCATION ASSISTANCE ACT--ContinuedRegulations

An Indian tribe dealing with the Government under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act is not required to be, or to become, expert in the Bureau of Indian Affairs' complex budgetary scheme. It is BIA's responsibility to see that its administrative requirements are satisfied, and it cannot properly shift that responsibility to the Indian contractor.

Appeal of Devil's Lake Sioux Tribe, IBCA-1953 (Mar. 25, 1987)
94 I.D. 101

On reconsideration, the Board concludes that since the contract before it contains no termination for convenience clause and since the Government did not establish that it met the requirements of any other clause permitting modification or termination of the contract, the requirements of the contract were not met, and the contractor is entitled to recover in full the expenses it incurred in performing its work under the contract.

Appeal of Navajo Community College (On Reconsideration), IBCA-1834 (May 8, 1987)

PERFORMANCE OR DEFAULTGenerally

A contractor's claim for additional compensation on the basis of changed site conditions will be denied where the sole basis for the claim is unanticipated costs allegedly incurred by the contractor as a result of a County decision to enforce existing vehicle weight restrictions that precluded the use of premixed concrete trucks on the only access road to the project site. It is immaterial whether the Government's own actions may have precipitated the County's enforcement decision. Liquidated damages are properly assessed when the contract provision authorizing their assessment is reasonable, and the contractor fails to show that the delay in the completion of the work arose

Acceleration

What constitutes an order to accelerate in a case where the contractor's theory of recoverability is constructive acceleration should not be measured against a rigid standard, being a flexible notion to be determined on a case-by-case basis; what must be found before a conclusion of constructive acceleration is proper are circumstances which suggest a reasonable conclusion that the Government wanted the contract work accelerated and pressured the contractor to accelerate in fact. In a case where the contract required the contractor to perform at sea and provided that unusually poor weather constituted an excuse for delay, the Government's (1) insistence that the contractor remain at sea ready to perform whenever the weather provided even short periods of operable time, (2) unreasonable delay in responding to the contractor's request for extension because of bad weather, and (3) issuance of cure notices threatening default termination for allegedly untimely performance when the contractor's terms required an extension of the performance period for excusable weather-related delays, taken together, constitute the circumstances necessary to a conclusion of constructive acceleration.

A claim against a contractor for damages asserted under the Termination For Default--Damages For Delay--Time Extension Clause is sustained when the contractor failed or refused to complete the work covered by a mop-up and fireline services contract and the amount charged against the contractor for completion of the work remaining with Government forces represents a reasonable measure of the damages sustained by the Government as a result of the contractor's failure to complete the contract work.

Appeal of Champion Timberland Services, Inc., IBCA-2061 (Feb. 28, 1986)

Mere allegations by a contractor that a BLM inspector ordered the performance of extra work in connection with a contract for the hand-piling of timber slash on Government forest lands are not sufficient to justify additional compensation where the Government inspector denies that he went beyond the contract specifications and the contractor offers no probative evidence in support of his allegations. Since the Government has the burden of proof on appeal that it was justified in terminating a building maintenance contract for default, it also has the burden of proving the occurrence of the deficiencies in the provision of janitorial services that led up to the notification to the contractor of the proposed termination.

In the absence of any proof by a contracting officer that he notified a building maintenance contractor at the time they occurred of alleged janitorial deficiencies leading up to a termination of the contract for default, the contractor is entitled to payment for its services up until the date of the termination even if it does not challenge the default termination as such.

Appeal of Michigan Building Maintenance, Inc., IBCA-1945 (Dec. 5, 1986)

A contractor's claim for amounts allegedly owed under a progress payment, which was suspended due to unsatisfactory performance of the contract work was denied, where the evidence showed that such work was never accepted by the Government, and that the value of the work performed by the contractor was far outweighed by the costs of procurement to replace and repair the deficiencies of the contractor's performance. The Government was found to have received no benefit from appellant's efforts, and was therefore not required to pay for any labor and materials expended by the contractor in its unsuccessful attempt to complete the contract.

Compensable Delays

In a cost-plus-fixed-fee level of effort contract with task order options held by the Government, the contractor had the burden to prove: (1) that it gave the proper notice and received authorization from the contracting officer, under the Limitation of Costs Clause, before it could recover for any foreseeable overrun; (2) that the Government, in delaying performance of the contract, had breached a contract obligation, which breach caused increased costs, in order to recover increased overhead and general and administrative costs above the contract ceiling for delays as an equitable adjustment for an implied change arising, de facto, under the Stop Work Order Clause; (3) that the Government had an obligation to exercise options in order for the contractor to recover any amounts for failure to exercise such options. Where the contractor waited until after performance was complete to invoice for amounts in excess of contract limitations and had earlier agreed to a change accomplishing an increase of costs limitation as covering all performance, it could not and did not carry its burden for compensable overrun; where it waited over 6 years to make a claim, failed to present auditable cost records at any time, relied on the mere existence of delays to establish a Government breach and failed to connect any alleged breach to specific cost increases, it failed to carry its burden of proving delays amounting to a breach such as would allow recovery for an equitable adjustment for expenses in excess of contract ceilings as a de facto stop under the Stop Work Order clause; where it presented mere allegations of fraud and malevolence in Government motivation and conduct but failed to present proof of the allegations nor even of what they meant, it failed to carry its burden to show that the Government had some obligation to exercise contract options. Where the Board found that a contract modification representing the settlement of certain claims against the Government did not represent the final integrated expression of the parties' agreement as it pertained to other claims that were not being settled, it allowed the introduction of parol evidence to ascertain the true intent of the parties as to effect of the modification. The Board further found that parol evidence established a mutual agreement differing from that suggested by the modification. Thus, the contractor was not barred from asserting its subsequent claim on the grounds of alleged accord and satisfaction or payment and release.

Appeal of Gracon Corp., IBCA-2271 (Oct. 18, 1988)

Unspecific, standard release language in a contract modification is sufficient to dispose only of those matters to which it clearly relates and/or which were within the contemplation of the parties. The legislative history of the Act of July 6, 1960, clearly shows that Congress concluded that the Federal Government holds title to land relinquished to the Federal Government in anticipation of a forest lieu exchange, notwithstanding the failure to consummate the exchange.

An application for a recordable disclaimer of the Government's interest in a parcel of land in the Los Padres National Forest (formerly, Pine Mountain and Zaca Lake Forest Reserve) pursuant to sec. 315 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, which parcel was deeded to the Government in 1901 in contemplation of selecting another parcel in lieu thereof pursuant to the Act of June 4, 1897, is properly rejected even though the lieu selection was never consummated, because the Act of July 6, 1960, quieted title to such land in the United States as part of the national forest in which the lands are located.

Sec. 905 of ANILCA, 43 U.S.C. § 1634 (1982), did not operate to legislatively approve Native allotments on land conveyed out of Federal ownership before the enactment of ANILCA. Legislation passed by Congress concerning disposition of the public lands cannot generally transfer title to lands previously conveyed into private ownership and which are, hence, no longer part of the public domain. To hold otherwise would pose serious constitutional problems concerning deprivation of property without due process of law in violation of the Fifth Amendment.

If the Department conveyed land prior to the final adjudication of a pending Native allotment application, the Department would no longer have jurisdiction over the land. Nevertheless, a hearing may be required to decide disputed issues of fact to determine whether the applicant had established a valid existing right to an allotment on the date of conveyance which would warrant initiation of action to recover the land. A hearing is not required if an applicant's allegations of material fact are insufficient, as a matter of law, to establish a valid existing right to an allotment.

Although the Department may seek cancellation of a conveyance which includes land described by a valid Native allotment application, a Native allotment applicant has no valid existing right to an allotment for land conveyed if the allotment application was not pending on the date of conveyance, or, if the application was previously relinquished, there is no showing that the relinquishment was neither voluntary nor knowing.

The statute's wording does not provide for any exception and the Department cannot defeat a right by creating an exception to its application.

Supreme Court decisions that the statute of limitations for initiating suits to vacate and annul patents, 43 U.S.C. § 1166 (1982), does not preclude suits by the United States to annul patents issued in alleged violation of rights of its Indian wards do not apply to permit contest proceedings if the Department is precluded from bringing a contest by the Confirmation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1165 (1982). The Confirmation Act transfers to the courts authority over controversies arising after the 2-year period has passed, and gives the patentee the protection of a judicial forum.

The Confirmation Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1165 (1982), does not apply when the applicant has not tendered payment for the land and a receipt has not been issued.

If a proper party lodged a timely protest of a Native allotment application filed pursuant to the Act of May 17, 1906, 34 Stat. 197, that application is removed from the automatic vesting provisions of ANILCA, and is adjudicated pursuant to the Act of May 17, 1906. If, after adjudication, BLM issues a decision holding the Native allotment application for approval, the adjudicatory process had been carried to the point of a BLM decision on the merits of the application. Having preserved his rights under sec. 905(a)(1) of ANILCA, the party is entitled to initiate a private contest upon receipt of notice of BLM's intent to grant the Native allotment.

When the decision holding the Native allotment application for approval also rejects a selection application filed pursuant to ANCSA, and affords the Native village corporation the opportunity to initiate a private contest, the Native village corporation has a choice regarding how to continue its objections to the approval of the Native allotment application. It may initiate a private contest or allow the decision to become final and appeal from that decision. If it elects to file a private contest, it is not required to pursue an appeal.

A conveyance to a Native corporation under ANSCA is subject to valid existing rights. A conflicting application based on settlement and occupancy maintained under laws leading to acquisition of title is properly excluded from an ANSCA conveyance.

Kootznoowoo, Inc. v. Heirs of Jimmie Johnson, 109 IBLA 128 (June 8, 1989)

INTEREST CONVEYED

A quitclaim deed conveys only the interest held by the grantor. Conveyance by quitclaim deed of an interest in a mining claim which is properly held to have been void ab initio conveys no interest to the grantee.

RESERVATIONS

Although available information suggests the possibility an existing trail across a Native allotment claim might qualify as a preexisting R.S. 2477 right-of-way, the Department is not required to adjudicate such rights-of-way. Since the adjudication of R.S. 2477 rights-of-way is primarily a matter for the state courts, and since no Departmental need would be served by an adjudication of the R.S. 2477 roadway in this case, no mention of the right-of-way should appear in the conveyance.

Where land has been conveyed to the United States reserving to the grantors the exclusive right to prospect for and exploit the oil and gas underlying the land and that reservation has been extended beyond its initial term by production, in accordance with the terms of the deed, the United States has, during the extended term, no interest in any of that oil and gas sufficient to form the basis for claiming compensatory royalty because of drainage.

Doris Slaaten, 107 IBLA 16 (Jan. 25, 1989)

This Board will affirm a BLM decision consenting to directional drilling of an oil and gas well spudded on state lands, drilled through lands described in a Federal lease, and bottomed on private lands when there is a showing that the consent is conditioned upon taking steps to prevent unnecessary or unreasonable interference with the right of the Federal lessee.

RESERVATIONS AND EXCEPTIONS

Sec. 209(a) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1719 (1982), requires that all conveyances of title issued by the Secretary, with certain express exceptions, reserve to the United States all minerals in the land, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the minerals under applicable law and such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe. The fact that there existed no outstanding mineral interests of record as of the date of patent issuance did not preclude the United States from reserving the mineral interests.

COURTS

A judgment rendered in adverse proceedings is not conclusive as to matters which might have been decided, but only as to matters which were in fact decided. Unlike litigation over title to real property, the judgment in a judicial proceeding between locators determines superiority of possessory title. Unless mandated by the terms of the judgment, there may be no reason to conclude that, in reaching its judgment, the court made a finding of fact argued for by a party when offering evidence.

The effect attributed to a judgment issued in adverse proceedings must rest upon the judicial authority of the court in resolving conflicts as to facts and making rulings upon applicable law. Although a settlement reached by the parties must be reviewed and approved by the court, if it approves, there is no need to decide the factual and legal issues on which it otherwise would have based its decision. For this reason, factual and legal conclusions stated in a settlement to which the United States is not a party cannot be binding upon the Department.

The filing of and the preliminary injunction order issued in National Wildlife Federation v. Burford, Civ. No. 85-2238 (D.D.C. Sally Ann Lana Henderson, Donald James Henderson, 107 IBLA 193 (Feb. 14, 1989)

The death of an applicant for a desert land entry will cause the application to lapse and, hence, where an applicant dies during the course of an appeal from rejection of his application, the appeal is properly dismissed as moot.

A BLM decision rejecting a desert land entry application because it is considered not economically feasible to farm the land applied for based on a computer projection may be set aside and the case remanded where the applicant alleges facts which would tend to support a different conclusion and the BLM analysis has failed to consider relevant aspects of appellant's plan of development.

CANCELLATION

The Government, by granting an extension of time to an entryman in which to make his proof of a completed desert land entry, is not estopped from a later rejection of that entry by virtue of the fact that an extension of time was allowed. When, at the time of granting the entryman additional time to prove he conveyed water upon desert land, the Government cautioned the entryman that he would be required to prove compliance with his irrigation plan, the entryman had notice he would be required to show his plan of reclamation had been completed when final proof was made.

United States v. James M. Mills (On Reconsideration), 94 IBLA 59 (Sept. 26, 1986)

DISTRIBUTION SYSTEM

To obtain equitable adjudication pursuant to 43 CFR 1871.1-1, a desert land entryman is required to show substantial compliance with requirements for providing an adequate water supply and distribution system for his desert land entry. Failure to show substantial compliance with reclamation requirements requires rejection of a petition for equitable adjudication of the entry.

Failure to show that substantial compliance with reclamation requirements of the Desert Land Entry Act was prevented by accident, mistake, or some circumstance beyond the control of the entryman requires rejection of a petition for equitable adjudication and cancellation of the entry.

James M. Mills, 108 IBLA 155 (Apr. 10, 1989)

EXTENSION OF TIME

An application for an extension of time to make final proof, as authorized by the Act of Mar. 28, 1908, 43 U.S.C. § 333 (1982), is not properly rejected solely because it was made during the course of the final proof meeting at the conclusion of the entry.

Anna R. Williams, Frances L. Roylance, 108 IBLA 88 (Mar. 28, 1989)

Where a desert land entryperson is allowed only one extension of time to file final proof under each of three statutes (43 U.S.C. §§ 333, 334, and 336 (1982)), and has received those three extensions, a further request must be denied, regardless of the authority cited by BLM in granting the extensions, because no further authority exists for approving extensions.

Where a desert land entrypersion claims reliance on incorrect citations in BLM decisions granting extensions of time to file final proof, in order to claim the existence of authority for a further extension of time, such reliance clearly cannot create any rights not authorized by law.

Elaine S. Stickelman, 108 IBLA 392 (May 22, 1989)

LANDS SUBJECT TO

In the absence of favorable action upon a petition to designate the land as suitable for desert land entry, an application for a desert land entry will not be considered a valid existing right excepted from a subsequent withdrawal order, and the application must be rejected by BLM, regardless of any challenge to the propriety and efficacy of the subsequent withdrawal.

GENERALLY

When it has been determined a proposed action is located in an area occupied by a species identified as being threatened or endangered, the Department is required by 16 U.S.C. § 1536(a)(2) (1982) to assure any action authorized by it is not likely to jeopardize the continued existence of the threatened or endangered species, or result in the adverse modification of the critical habitat of such species, or seek an exemption pursuant to 16 U.S.C. § 1536(h) (1982). If a determination that approval of an application for a permit to drill an oil and gas well will result in "no jeopardy" is based upon the implementation of certain mitigating measures, the application for permission to drill may be approved only after it has been determined that the mitigating measures can be imposed upon necessary parties.

In accordance with sec. 7(a)(2) of the Endangered Species Act, as amended, 16 U.S.C. § 1536(a)(2) (1982), BLM is required to assure that any action authorized by it is not likely to jeopardize the continued existence of any threatened or endangered species or to result in the adverse modification of the critical habitat of such species, and to use the best scientific and commercial data available to fulfill this requirement. When it has been determined a proposed action is located in an area occupied by a species identified as being threatened or endangered, the Department is required by 16 U.S.C. § 1536(a)(2) (1982) to assure any action authorized by it is not likely to jeopardize the continued existence of the threatened or endangered species, or result in the adverse modification of the critical habitat of such species, or seek an exemption pursuant to 16 U.S.C. § 1536(h) (1982). ENVIRONMENTAL POLICY ACT

(See also National Environmental Policy Act of 1969--if included in this Index.)

Execution of a cooperative agreement between the Bureau of Land Management and a state wildlife management agency providing for study and preservation of wildlife habitat does not ordinarily constitute a proposal for major Federal action which may adversely affect the human environment requiring preparation of an environmental impact statement.

Lane County Audubon Society et al., 85 IBLA 185 (Feb. 26, 1985)

Approval of an application for a permit to drill has been identified by the Department as an action categorically excluded from the provisions of the National Environmental Policy Act requiring preparation of an environmental assessment (EA) or environmental impact statement (EIS). However, in exceptional circumstances approval of an application for a permit to drill raises sufficient concern to warrant the preparation of an EA. An EA is proper when there is reason to believe the proposed action might pose a threat to a threatened or endangered species.

A determination that a proposed action will not have a significant impact on the quality of the human environment will be affirmed on appeal if the record establishes that a careful review of environmental problems has been made, relevant areas of environmental concern have been identified, and the final determination is reasonable. The party challenging a determination must show that the determination was premised on a clear error of law, a demonstrable error of fact, or that the analysis failed to consider a substantial environmental question of material significance to the action for which the analysis was prepared. Mere differences of opinion provide no basis for reversal if BLM's decision is reasonable and supported by the record on appeal.

The proximity of the proposed action to national park lands is a material factor to be considered in the analysis of the intensity or severity of the impact of the proposed action on the human environment. When the official having responsibility for managing parklands near the site of the proposed action expresses an opinion that the proposed action may or will adversely affect the park ecosystem, that opinion should be afforded substantial weight in the EA.

The degree to which the proposed action may be considered as highly controversial is a material factor to be considered in the analysis of the intensity or severity of the impact of the proposed action on the human environment. However, the mere fact that persons or organizations oppose the proposed action does not per se render the action "highly controversial," as the term properly refers to cases where a substantial dispute exists as to the size, nature, or effect of the action. Even when certain aspects of a proposed action may be deemed highly controversial, an EIS need not be prepared if the effects giving rise to the controversy have been adequately mitigated.

Connected action must be considered to be a part of the proposed action when determining whether a proposed action will have a significant effect on the human environment. Connected actions include those which: (i) automatically trigger other actions which may require an EIS; (ii) cannot or will not proceed unless other actions are undertaken previously or simultaneously; or (iii) are interdependent parts of a larger action and depend on the larger action for their justification.

When making a determination whether a proposed action will have a significant effect on the human environment, the cumulative effect of the proposed action and other actions not connected with the proposed action must be taken into consideration, even though, individually, the actions may be deemed insignificant. However, the possible impact of a speculative future action need not be considered when it can reasonably be assumed that such future action will not take place, or, if it will take place, an EA will be completed prior to a decision to take such action.

The adverse effects of a proposed action may be reduced to a point where they no longer have a significant impact upon the human environment by the implementation of mitigating measures. However, the agency imposing such additional requirements deemed necessary to mitigate the adverse effect of the proposed action must have the authority to enforce compliance with the mitigating measures imposed.

When it has been determined a proposed action is located in an area occupied by a species identified as being threatened or endangered, the Department is required by 16 U.S.C. § 1536(a)(2) (1982) to assure any action authorized by it is not likely to jeopardize the continued existence of the threatened or endangered species or result in the adverse modification of the critical habitat of such species, or seek an exemption pursuant to 16 U.S.C. § 1536(h) (1982). If a determination that approval of an application for a permit to drill an oil and gas well will result in "no jeopardy" is based upon the implementation of certain mitigating measures, the application for permission to drill may be approved only after it has been determined that the mitigating measures can be imposed upon necessary parties.

When a finding that no significant impact will result from construction of a road to a drillsite is critically dependent upon the location of that road along a route avoiding critical habitat of a threatened or endangered species, a stipulation to the application for a permit to drill allowing the road to be relocated to avoid destruction of a cultural resource value is in conflict with the basis for determination that no significant impact will occur. The cultural resource stipulation must be amended to prohibit relocation of the road or require a supplemental EA prior to relocating the road.

A range improvement project is subject to the requirement that an environmental assessment be prepared. An environmental assessment must take a hard look at the issues, identify the relevant areas of environmental concern, and make a convincing case that environmental impacts are not significant. A decision that a proposed action does not require preparation of an environmental impact statement will be affirmed if it appears to have been made by an authorized officer, in good faith, based upon a proper and sufficient environmental analysis record compiled in accordance with established procedures, and is the reasonable result of the officer's study of such a record.

Under the decision of the Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit in Park County Resource Council, Inc. v. United States Department of Agriculture, 817 F.2d 609 (1987), where an initial exploratory well has been successfully drilled and a lessee files an APD for additional development wells, the filing of the APD triggers the requirement for an Environmental Impact Statement, unless an Environmental Impact Statement has already been prepared which analyzes the impacts that can be expected from full field development.

ENVIRONMENTAL STATEMENTS

A decision to issue oil and gas leases within an area of critical environmental concern pursuant to a categorical exclusion review will ordinarily be set aside and remanded for preparation of an environmental assessment where the categorical exclusion review discloses potential adverse impacts on threatened and endangered species. This constitutes an exception to the categorical exclusion review process under Departmental procedures, 516 DM 2, Appendix 2, § 2.8.

Analysis of the impact of a proposed action under the National Environmental Policy Act, as amended, 42 U.S.C. § 4332 (1982), is required prior to an irrevocable commitment of resources. A decision deferring preparation of an environmental assessment and/or environmental impact statement in connection with issuance of a noncompetitive onshore oil and gas lease until such time as a site-specific plan of operations is submitted by the lessee may be affirmed where the lessee's right to surface occupancy is conditioned upon approval of a site-specific plan of operations in light of that environmental analysis.

Benton C. Cavin, 93 IBLA 211 (Aug. 20, 1986)

By regulation, the Department has interpreted the Equal Access to Justice Act to exclude all proceedings except those required by statute to be conducted under 5 U.S.C. § 554 (1982).

Utu Utu Gwaitsu Paiute Tribe of the Benton Paiute Reservation v. Sacramento Area Director, Bureau of Indian Affairs, 17 IBLA 141 (June 19, 1989)

Under the Equal Access to Justice Act, an eligible applicant that has prevailed before the Board in an appeal in which the Government's position clearly was not substantially justified is entitled to attorney fees and other expenses based upon a constructive attorney charge of $75 per hour and upon actual law clerk costs for the hours worked, plus related expenses despite the fact that the actual legal fees paid by the appellant were determined by a contingent fee arrangement with its attorney, rather than on an hourly basis.

Under the Equal Access to Justice Act, where an eligible prevailing party was not substantially justified, is found to have carefully excluded its unallowable attorney fees and expenses, such as those involving periods preceding, or matters extraneous to, its appeal before the Board; and where both the periods of time charged and the costs claimed as allowable in the proceeding before the Board appear to be reasonable; and where it is clear that the amount being sought as allowable will not compensate the applicant for even the majority of its appeal costs, the Board will exercise its discretion in accepting the fees and expenses applied for as reasonable under the circumstances, without undertaking the detailed inquiry it would normally make.

Under the Equal Access to Justice Act, an eligible applicant that has prevailed in an adversary adjudication before the Board, may nevertheless not recover its attorney fees, and other expenses connected with such proceedings, where the Government demonstrates that its position was substantially justified, i.e., that it had a reasonable basis in law and fact.

The position of the Government in denying appellant's termination settlement claim was reasonable and substantially justified where the parties negotiated a settlement agreement, without litigation, including only 18 percent of the claimed direct and indirect costs and profit claimed, and such agreement reimbursed appellant for the expenses incurred during the negotiation period, including loan interest expense, settlement expenses, attorney fees, and Contract Disputes Act interest on the amount awarded.

Where the Board found that a contractor was not entitled to an EAJA award for an unsuccessful claim because it was not the prevailing party on that claim, but found that the contractor's attorneys spent a negligible amount of time on preparation and presentation of such claims in comparison to the time spent on the other three claims involved in the principal litigation, the Board determined by a jury verdict approach that appellant's attorneys and their paralegals spent no more than 6 and 10 hours respectively on the unsuccessful claim and held that, therefore, only $800 should be deducted from the EAJA application request of $74,460.

Where the Government has not acted arbitrarily or unreasonably in its negotiations prior to the Board's hearing on the merits of an underlying contract appeal, but facts and explanations become evident at the hearing that the Government would not ordinarily have been expected to know, which evidence ultimately entitles appellant to prevail on its contract claims, then the hearing was clearly essential to the appellant's case and appellant is not entitled to attorney fees or costs, since the Government's position in contesting the claim prior to the hearing was substantially justified.

The Government's position in contesting a contractor's claim for interest on a disputed construction claim paid pursuant to a settlement agreement was not substantially justified where: (1) the contracting officer ultimately paid the entire amount of the contractor's claim except for interest; (2) the contracting officer's decision denying entitlement to interest on the basis of noncertification was legally in error; (3) the contracting officer's affidavit that he thought interest was included in the settlement agreement had an insufficient basis and was patently inconsistent with other documents in the record; and (4) the appeal file compiled by the contracting officer inexplicably failed to include numerous documents that were essential to the proper resolution of the dispute between the parties, thereby giving rise to questionable assertions by counsel.

EQUITABLE ADJUDICATIONSUBSTANTIAL COMPLIANCE

Substantial compliance with the law is a prerequisite for the invocation of equitable adjudication to permit consideration of a homesite purchase application that was not filed within the time required.

Marie M. Bunn, 100 IBLA 1 (Nov. 12, 1987)

To obtain equitable adjudication pursuant to 43 CFR 1871.1-1, a desert land entryman is required to show substantial compliance with requirements for providing an adequate water supply and distribution system for his desert land entry. Failure to show substantial compliance with reclamation requirements requires rejection of a petition for equitable adjudication of the entry.

Failure to show that substantial compliance with reclamation requirements of the Desert Land Entry Act was prevented by accident, mistake, or some circumstance beyond the control of the entryman requires rejection of a petition for equitable adjudication and cancellation of the entry.

Where substantial compliance is a prerequisite for the invocation of equitable adjudication, the principle is not applicable to a mining claim deemed abandoned and void for failure to timely submit the annual filing required under sec. 314 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), because, as the Supreme Court in Locke v. United States, 471 U.S. 84 (1985), held, there is no possibility of substantial compliance where the claimant has failed to comply with the deadline established by Congress. Further, the fact that Congress made sec. 314 self-operative and did not provide the Department with the authority to waive the statutory consequences for failure to comply, dispels the view that Congress intended for a claim deemed abandoned and void to be eligible for reinstatement under some other avenue.

BLM has no affirmative duty to mineral locators to promptly check the legal status of every claim filed with them and to apprise a claimant of its findings; and claimant's reliance upon erroneous information from BLM employees cannot create rights not authorized by law.

If, subsequent to giving notice that a party is in trespass when removing sand and gravel from lands in which the Government has retained all minerals, BLM agrees to allow the mining operations to continue while negotiating a settlement of the issue of trespass damages, the continued operations should not be considered as willful trespass unless and until the operator is given notice that the mining operations should cease.

The rule is subject to the exception that review is available to correct or reverse an erroneous decision upon a showing of compelling legal or equitable reasons such as violations of basic rights or the need to prevent an injustice.

Jeffery Ranches, Inc. v. Bureau of Land Management, 102 IBLA 379 (June 17, 1988)

An alleged misrepresentation by BLM of mining claim recordation requirements is not an appropriate basis for equitable estoppel where the party asserting estoppel could have become aware of the true requirements by reference to explicit provisions of the governing Federal statute and Departmental regulations. Furthermore, a claim of estoppel based on appellants' vague allegations that they made the filing "on the instruction from the BLM office" fails, because appellants have not established that BLM made a crucial misstatement in an official decision or otherwise engaged in any "official misconduct."

Henry E. Krizman et al., 104 IBLA 9 (Aug. 15, 1988)

Where an operator begins excavation of coal on Federal lands without a Federal permit, negotiates with OSMRE to suspend enforcement action pending litigation in Federal court of the need for a Federal permit, and ceases operations in reliance upon the agreement, OSMRE is bound by the terms of the agreement made with the operator and may not issue a notice of violation for conditions created by the agreement itself.

Gabriel Energy Corp. v. Office of Surface Mining Reclamation & Enforcement, 105 IBLA 53 (Oct. 17, 1988)

Failure to specifically exclude a category of leases in a Notice to Lessee or Notice to Payors stating that royalties were not required for "oil and gas used for production purposes on OCS oil and gas leases" is not affirmative misconduct that will support estoppel against the Government.

Sonat Exploration Co., et al., 105 IBLA 97 (Oct. 24, 1988)

The application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel against the Federal Government is justified only if doing so does not interfere with underlying Government policies or unduly undermine the correct enforcement of a particular law or regulation.

ESTOPPEL--Continued

An essential element of a claim for estoppel is that the party asserting it must be ignorant of the true facts. Since, however, all persons are presumed to have knowledge of relevant statutory and regulatory provisions, estoppel will not lie when the legal consequences of an action are clearly set forth in statute and/or regulation.

Terra Resources, Inc., 107 IBLA 10 (Jan. 24, 1989)

The acceptance of a mining claim filing for recordation does not preclude BLM from subsequently declaring the claim to be null and void ab initio upon a finding that the land on which the claim was located was withdrawn from the location of mining claims at the time the claim was located.

Robert L. Payne et al., 107 IBLA 71 (Jan. 30, 1989)

The authority of the United States to enforce a public right or protect a public interest is not vitiated or lost by laches, neglect of duty, failure to act, or delays in the performance of duties.

Mallon Oil Co., 107 IBLA 150 (Feb. 10, 1989)

Estoppel will not lie against the Government to preclude collection of late payment charges where a coal lessee allegedly makes royalty payments based on the erroneous advice of a Government employee concerning the royalty rate, but the record shows that the lessee was not ignorant of the true facts concerning the effective date of a new royalty rate.

Utah International, Inc., 107 IBLA 217 (Feb. 21, 1989)

Employees of the executive branch, including BLM, have no authority to depart from the requirements of statutes dealing with public lands. All citizens are deemed to have knowledge of such statutes. Thus, even though a coal lessee was erroneously advised by BLM that his coal lease would be subject to readjustment in 1999 rather than in 1989, the Government is not estopped from readjusting the lease in 1989 as provided by statute.

Chevron U.S.A., Inc., The Pittsburgh & Midway Coal Mining Co., 108 IBLA 96 (Mar. 29, 1989)

Where a desert land entryperson claims reliance on incorrect citations in BLM decisions granting extensions of time to file final proof in order to claim the existence of authority for a further extension of time, such reliance clearly cannot create any rights not authorized by law.

Elaine S. Stickelman, 108 IBLA 392 (May 22, 1989)

The United States is not barred by the equitable defense of estoppel from enforcing public land laws. Moreover, BLM owes no duty to mining claimants to promptly ascertain the legal status of every claim filed and inform such claimants of its findings.

Kenneth Russell, 109 IBLA 180 (June 9, 1989)

BLM is not required under the doctrine of either bona fide rights or equitable estoppel to accept a line which has been surveyed on the ground with appropriate monumentation but which has never been officially approved by BLM, even where private landowners may have relied on the monuments in purchasing land and constructing improvements.

First American Title Insurance Co. v. Bureau of Land Management, Fort Mojave Indian Tribe (Intervenor), 110 IBLA 25 (July 7, 1989)

Estoppel will not lie when the party asserting it is charged with knowledge of the requirements of a regulation, because the person is not ignorant of the true facts. OSMRE's failure to inform a permittee of a requirement to eliminate an underwater highwall by grading it to an appropriate contour does not constitute affirmative misconduct for purposes of estoppel.

Approval of a permit application by a state regulatory authority is not litigation that would preclude subsequent issuance of a notice of violation by OSMRE under the doctrine of collateral estoppel.

Donaldson Creek Mining Co. v. Office of Surface Mining Reclamation & Enforcement, 111 IBLA 289 (Oct. 26, 1989)

One who holds an oil and gas lease from the United States is presumed to know the applicable laws and regulations, and the United States cannot be bound or estopped by acts of its officers or agents, if doing so would undermine the correct enforcement of a particular law or regulation. Reliance upon erroneous or incomplete information provided by a BLM employee will not overcome a clear regulatory requirement.

Bureau of Land Management v. David & Bonnie Ericsson, 88 IBLA 248 (Sept. 4, 1985)

Evidence that a mining claimant possesses a return receipt card or certified mail receipt indicating there was a timely filing of a document with BLM and there is no evidence that the claimant filed any other document with BLM on that date serves to rebut the presumption of non-filing which is customarily applied where BLM's records indicate a required filing has not occurred. Although the nature of the document received by BLM is not described on the receipt or card, the existence of this proof indicates that, more likely than not, a required document was in fact received by BLM.

Richard A. Willers, 101 IBLA 106 (Feb. 2, 1988)

Evidence that a mining claimant possesses an acknowledgment receipt card with an attachment purportedly listing those claims for which annual filings were received during the calendar year in question and the fact that BLM does not challenge her characterization of the evidence serves to rebut the presumption of nonfiling which is customarily applied where BLM's records indicate a required filing has not been made.

A holder of a noncompetitive oil and gas lease who challenges a determination that certain lands are within the known geologic structure of a producing oil or gas field has the burden of establishing that the determination is in error. Where the record establishes that the Secretary's technical expert has made a reasoned analysis of the available geological data, the Secretary is entitled to rely upon his expert's professional opinion, absent a showing of error by a preponderance of the evidence.

Celeste C. Grynberg, 107 IBLA 143 (Feb. 7, 1989)

By regulation 43 CFR 3833.0-5(m), the Department considers affidavits of annual assessment work or notices of intention to hold to be timely filed if placed in an envelope postmarked by the U.S. Postal Service on or before Dec. 30 and received in the proper BLM office on or before the following Jan. 19. Where the record shows that a mining claimant utilized the U.S. Postal Service to deliver his affidavit of assessment work and that it was received by the proper BLM office on Jan. 6, 1986, but the record does not contain the envelope in which the affidavit was sent, the mining claimant will not be required to bear the consequences of BLM's failure to retain the envelope, and a decision declaring the claim abandoned and void will be reversed.

Gary Hennis, 108 IBLA 121 (Mar. 30, 1989)

Evidence that a mining claimant possesses a return receipt card or certified mail receipt indicating there was a timely filing of a document with BLM serves to rebut the presumption of nonfiling which is customarily applied where BLM's records indicate a required filing has not occurred, absent a showing by BLM that the claimant filed any other document on that date. Although the nature of the document received by BLM is not described on the receipt or card, the existence of this proof indicates it is more probable than not that the required document was received by BLM.

Where BLM prepares a Technical Mineral Report for purposes of evaluation, based upon geologic considerations, of the extent of known gilsonite deposits, the Secretary is entitled to rely upon the expertise of his technical experts, and absent showing of error by a preponderance of the evidence, a mere difference of opinion with the expert will not suffice to reverse the reasoned opinions of the Secretary's technical staff.

Where appellant attempted to show error in a Technical Mineral Report prepared by BLM by alleging inconsistency in the report, by alleging that as a basis for its report, BLM used criteria applicable to the coal mining industry and not appropriate to the gilsonite industry, and by arguing that BLM's choices of parameters for competitive leasing are not based in fact; and where appellant submitted no proof other than an affidavit by its president, which did not indicate any basis in geologic analysis, appellant did not establish error in the Bureau's report by a preponderance of the evidence, and the Secretary was entitled to rely upon the reasoned opinions of his technical expert.

Appeal of James P. Glynn, 6 OHA 13 (Feb. 6, 1985)

When the Government rejects a competitive oil and gas lease high bid because it was less than the presale tract valuation, the bidder must not only disprove the Government's fair market estimates, but must also prove that his bids constitute fair market value. However, appellant does not bear this burden until after the Government has established a prima facie case supporting its estimates.

Burton/Hawks, Inc., 85 IBLA 193 (Feb. 27, 1985)

When the Government contests a mining claim on the basis of lack of discovery of a valuable mineral deposit, it has the burden of going forward with sufficient evidence to establish a prima facie case as to that charge. United States v. Clyde L. Weekley, 86 IBLA 1 (Mar. 29, 1985)

Harold Green v. Bureau of Land Management, 93 IBLA 237 (Aug. 22, 1986)

A party appealing a rejection of a bid submitted in a competitive oil and gas lease sale because the bid has been found to be less than the fair market value has the affirmative obligation to prove the Government estimate was inaccurate and the bid submitted represents fair market value.

CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES

In denying a request by appellant that the testimony of a project engineer on a Government project for the construction of a dam be disregarded as in conflict with an entry in the project diary made by an inspector, the Board noted that there appeared to be a reasonable basis for reconciling the purportedly conflicting evidence but that in any event there was an obligation to confront the project engineer with the diary entry at the hearing, if, after the record was closed, appellant was to rely upon the diary entry to discredit the testimony given by the project engineer.

A claim under a construction contract for diversion of a river around a construction site is denied, where the Board finds that prior to a dispute arising, the parties had interpreted the contract as requiring the contractor to do the work involving the diversion for which the claim was made.

A claim for additional costs incurred in placing a clay seal and performing other work related to preparation of the upstream apron foundation is denied, where the Board finds that the work covered by the claim stemmed from the flouting by appellant of the specification requirement that where concrete is to be placed on any excavated surface special care shall be taken not to disturb the bottom of the excavation more than necessary and that faced with the prospect of

A person challenging a Departmental determination that lands are within a KGS has the burden of showing by a preponderance of the evidence that the determination is in error. To establish the preponderance of the evidence means to prove that something is more likely so than not; in other words, "the preponderance of the evidence" means such evidence, when considered and compared with the opposite to it, has more convincing force and produces in your mind's belief that what is sought to be proved is more likely to be true than not.

The Secretary of the Interior has traditionally delegated the responsibility for determining the existence and extent of a KGS to his technical experts in the field. When a technical expert makes a determination that lands qualify for inclusion in a KGS, the Secretary is entitled to rely upon his reasoning. On the other hand, the determination of whether the lands are properly included in a KGS is largely dependent upon factual interpretation, and when there is a material issue of fact determinative of the issues posed, this Board has the discretionary authority to order a hearing on the matter before an Administrative Law Judge pursuant to 43 CFR 4.415.

Ralph C. Memmott, 88 IBLA 372 (Sept. 27, 1985)

The legal presumption that administrative officials have properly discharged their duties and not lost or misplaced legally significant documents filed with them is rebuttable by probative evidence to the contrary.

Norman A. Whittaker, 89 IBLA 224 (Oct. 28, 1985)

John H. Blackwood, 89 IBLA 379 (Nov. 22, 1985)

Where the record does not indicate receipt of a document purportedly sent, a legal, but rebuttable, presumption exists that administrative officials did not receive the document.

Yates Petroleum Corp., 91 IBLA 252 (Apr. 9, 1986)

BLM may properly issue a notice of incident of noncompliance with 43 CFR 3162.4-3, requiring the filing of a monthly report of operations with respect to an oil and gas lease, where that document is not in the record and the presumption that BLM did not lose or misplace it has not been rebutted.

Apollo Energy Inc., 94 IBLA 154 (Oct. 23, 1986)

BLM properly denies a petition for reinstatement of a noncompetitive oil and gas lease terminated by operation of law for failure to pay annual rental timely, filed pursuant to 30 U.S.C. § 188(c) (1982), where the lessee fails to overcome the presumption that BLM never received the rental due either before the lease anniversary date or within 20 days thereafter.

Ben Swartzentruber, Jr., 94 IBLA 344 (Nov. 26, 1986)

The legal presumption that administrative officials have properly discharged their duties and not lost or misplaced legally significant documents filed with them is rebuttable by probative evidence to the contrary. However, affidavits that copies of signed oil and gas lease offers were timely filed with the proper BLM office must ordinarily be corroborated by other evidence to establish filing where there is no evidence of receipt of the documents in the file.

David A. Gittlitz, 95 IBLA 221 (Jan. 15, 1987)

The presumption that BLM employees have not lost or misplaced evidence of annual assessment work for an unpatented mining claim, required to be filed on or before Dec. 30, 1981, under sec. 314(a) of FLPMA, 43 U.S.C. § 1744(a) (1982), will not be overcome by proof that BLM mishandled evidence of annual assessment work filed during the 1984 calendar year.

Red Top Mercury Mines, Inc., 96 IBLA 391 (Apr. 14, 1987)

The presumption of regularity supports the acts of public officers and, in the absence of clear evidence to the contrary, they are presumed to have properly discharged their official duties.

Wallace Creek Sawmills, 97 IBLA 177 (May 8, 1987)

The assumption required by 30 U.S.C. § 29 (1982), "that no adverse claim exists" does not apply to claims which did not exist at the time of publication of notice of a patent application and for which no adverse claim could have been filed.

The assumption "that no adverse claim exists" required by 30 U.S.C. § 29 (1982), operates as a presumption that the patent applicant holds superior possessory title so that the Department may proceed to determine the question of whether his mining claim is valid under the mining laws. If the Department determines that the applicant's claim is valid and issues a patent, a rival claim becomes a nullity because there is no longer any Federal land to which it can attach as a location under the mining laws. If the patent application is rejected, matters are restored to where they stood prior to the application, and a rival locator may adverse a second application for land or apply for a patent himself.

There is a presumption which exists, until the contrary is shown, that land granted to a state for school purposes was of the character contemplated by the grant insofar as its mineral or nonmineral character is concerned.

State of Idaho, 101 IBLA 340 (Mar. 23, 1988) 95 I.D. 49

Inclusion of a simultaneous oil and gas lease application in a lease drawing does not corroborate an assertion that a list of partners was filed with that application by the partnership/applicant sufficiently to overcome the presumption of regularity, where, under BLM's procedures, applications filed without a list of partners were not excluded from drawings and no list of partners was found in BLM's files.

The presumption that the datestamp affixed to a certified mail return receipt card by a U.S. Postal Service employee was the date the item was delivered can be rebutted by an official Postal Service document showing the actual date of delivery and a statement by the Postal Service that delivery occurred on the date on the document rather than the date indicated by the return receipt card.

Enstar Corp., 102 IBLA 207 (May 10, 1988)

Neither the assumption required by 30 U.S.C. § 29 (1982), "that no adverse claim exists" nor the prohibition that "thereafter no objection from third parties to the issuance of a patent shall be heard" applies to invalidate mining claims. The inability to initiate an adverse proceeding once the publication period has passed does not render mining claims invalid if they are otherwise valid under the law.

Dugan Production Corp., 103 IBLA 362 (Aug. 11, 1988)

There is an established legal presumption, which may be rebutted, that official acts of public officers discharging their official duties are regular. That presumption can be rebutted by substantial evidence tending to show that BLM's action was not regular in a particular instance. If such a showing is made, the Board decides the case without further reference to the presumption, and the appellant must prove his case by a presumption of the evidence.

Leon F. Scully, Jr., 104 IBLA 367 (Sept. 27, 1988)

The legal presumption that administrative officials have properly discharged their duties and not lost or misplaced legally significant documents filed with them is rebuttable by probative evidence to the contrary. A copy of a proof of labor with the BLM serial number marked in handwriting, coupled with a statement that the original and the copy were hand delivered to BLM and a written acknowledgement by a BLM employee that the handwriting is her own, are sufficient evidence to establish that the proof of labor was timely filed at the proper BLM office.

Milton E. Kutil, 104 IBLA 396 (Oct. 5, 1988)

There is a legal presumption that administrative officials have properly discharged their duties and not lost or misplaced legally significant documents properly filed with them. This presumption is not rebutted where appellant asserts that royalty checks were timely mailed, but the checks were not cashed and there is no evidence the checks were received by Minerals Management Service.

Daniel D. Draper, 109 IBLA 85 (May 31, 1989)

No hearing is required to determine whether an application for a Native allotment was timely filed with the Department when the record contains affidavits stating only that the application was mailed prior to the Dec. 18, 1971, deadline. The presumption of regularity, which supports the official acts of public officers, in the discharge of their duties, must for reasons of public policy and under burden of proof analysis be accorded priority over the presumption that documents properly mailed are duly delivered.

PRIMA FACIE CASE

When the Government contests a mining claim on a charge of lack of discovery of a valuable mineral deposit, it has the burden of going forward with sufficient evidence to establish a prima facie case. Where a Government mineral examiner testifies that he has examined the land within a claim and found the quantity and quality of the minerals insufficient to support a finding of discovery, a prima facie case is established.

United States v. Norman A. Whittaker, 95 IBLA 271 (Jan. 29, 1987)

When the Government contests a Native allotment application on the basis of a failure to meet the requirements of the Native Allotment Act and the regulations, the contest is subject to dismissal where at the hearing the Government fails to present sufficient evidence to establish a prima facie case to support its complaint. However, where the applicant goes forward and presents evidence, all the evidence will be considered to determine whether a preponderance of that evidence establishes that the statutory and regulatory use and occupancy requirements were not met.

United States v. Estate of George D. Estabrook, John J. Estabrook, Leland R. Estabrook, 94 IBLA 38 (Sept. 25, 1986)

When the Government contests a mining claim alleging lack of discovery of a valuable mineral deposit it has the burden of going forward with sufficient evidence to establish a prima facie case. ## SUFFICIENCY

In determining whether or not a unit well is capable of producing unitized substances in paying quantities a "preponderance of the evidence" standard of proof must be employed. In determining whether or not one has met the applicable standard of proof, this Board will consider the actual standard applied rather than the phrase employed by the factfinder to describe it.

A hearing is not necessary in the absence of a material issue of fact, which, if proven, would alter the disposition of the matter. A hearing is not necessary where the dispute does not involve facts, but involves the proper application and interpretation of those facts, and the Bureau of Land Management properly reviewed the same information submitted to this Board.

A person claiming ownership of wild free-roaming horses on the public lands must present evidence of ownership to the authorized officer who may issue authorization for a roundup, specifying a reasonable time to effect gathering of the animals claimed. The criterion as to reasonable time is met where BLM has recognized a claim for 5 years and has granted four extensions during that period to effect gathering. Where the successor in interest to the original claimant presented a claim to an uncertain number of progeny, remote by several generations from the animals of the original claim, BLM properly refused to recognize such claim.

EXCHANGES OF LAND

(See also Indians, Private Exchanges, State Exchanges, Wildlife Refuges & Projects--if included in this Index.)

GENERALLY

Where the record in a private exchange case reflects that BLM considered the wildlife values of the public lands subject to exchange and determined them to be not significant, a claim that such lands are of critical importance to wildlife cannot be sustained where there is a failure to provide persuasive evidence that BLM's analysis of the wildlife values is improper.

The denial of a protest to a private land exchange will be upheld where BLM determines that the public interest is well served by proceeding with the exchange and the protestant fails to show BLM erred in that determination.

Where the Environmental Assessment/Land Report of a private land exchange reflects that BLM considered the alternative of imposing a conservation easement or land use covenant to protect wildlife values on the public land subject to exchange, but BLM's analysis results in the conclusion that such a restriction is not warranted, such a determination will not be overturned in the absence of a showing of error.

Where BLM denies a protest to a proposed private land exchange, it must inform the protestant of its right to appeal. The right of appeal is not dependent upon BLM's determination of whether the protestant claims ownership of public lands in the proposal or holds a valid existing contract, permit or lease for those lands. Denial of a protest makes the protestant a "party to a case" within the meaning of 43 CFR 4.410. Whether a party to a case has an interest which has been adversely affected by the BLM decision is a matter to be decided by the Board of Land Appeals on appeal.

Steinheimer Trust, 87 IBLA 308 (June 25, 1985)

Under certain circumstances a document styled as a protest is properly treated as an appeal. Thus, where prior to completion of a private exchange by BLM, the owner of the mineral interest in the private land involved therein requests that BLM acquire its interest and BLM proceeds to complete the exchange and subsequently deny the request, a protest filed by the owner should be treated by BLM as an appeal of its denial and the case file forwarded to the Board of Land Appeals.

A surface-only private exchange undertaken pursuant to sec. 11 of the Relocation Act, 25 U.S.C. § 640d-10(a)(1) (1982), over the objection of the owner of the mineral interest in the private land involved in the exchange does not violate that Act. The Act imposes no legal requirement on the Secretary of the Interior to acquire such interest.

While sec. 206 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act, 43 U.S.C. § 1716 (1982), is applicable to exchanges under 25 U.S.C. § 640d-10 (1982), the general prohibition of sec. 206 barring interstate exchanges is inapplicable. The specific language of 25 U.S.C. § 640d-10(b) (1982), providing that BLM lands anywhere within Arizona and New Mexico may be used for purposes of exchanging for lands within 18 miles of the boundary of the Navajo Reservation, is an exception to that general prohibition and is, thus, controlling.

The exchange regulations at 43 CFR Part 2200 apply to exchanges made pursuant to 25 U.S.C. § 640d-10 (1982). While those regulations set forth specific information requirements to be included in notices of realty action, a deficient notice does not negate an exchange thereunder, where the person asserting the deficiency had notice of the exchanges, the opportunity to comment, and was not prejudiced by BLM's failure to provide complete information therein.

Mendiboure Ranches, Inc., et al., 90 IBLA 360 (Feb. 27, 1986)

Sec. 206(a) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1716(a) (1982), authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to exchange public lands or any interests therein if the public interest will be well served by such exchange.

Although regulation 43 CFR 2201.1(b) provides that publication of a notice of realty action on an exchange proposal may segregate the public lands covered by the notice to the extent that they will not be subject to appropriation under the public land laws, including the mining laws, such segregation does not preclude BLM from considering during the pendency of the proposal a second exchange proposal, subsequently filed, that involves virtually the same selected public lands.

Sec. 207 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1717 (1982), provides that no tract of land may be disposed of under the Act, whether by sale, exchange, or donation, to any person who is not a citizen of the United States, or in the case of a corporation, is not subject to the laws of any State or of the United States.

Sec. 206(b) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1716(b) (1982), states that the values of lands exchanged by the Secretary under the Act either shall be equal, or if not equal, should be equalized by the payment of money to the grantor or to the Secretary as the circumstances require so long as payment does not exceed 25 per centum of the total value of the lands or interests transferred out of Federal ownership.

Under the regulations at 43 CFR Subpart 3435 which were promulgated to implement, inter alia, the Act of Oct. 30, 1978, P.L. 95-554, 92 Stat. 2073, a coal lease exchange proposal shall be evaluated in terms of whether the exchange is in the public interest. The Act of Oct. 30, 1978, authorizes the Secretary to approve lease exchanges for all or portions of specified existing leases transected by parts of Interstate Highway 90 in Wyoming, in order to avoid conflicts and problems associated with surface mining near or under highways. A decision by the Bureau of Land Management rejecting an exchange proposal submitted under that Act will be vacated when it fails to undertake the public interest determination required by both the regulations at 43 CFR 3435.2(c) and by the terms of an agreement entered into between the coal lessee and the Government.

Sec. 207 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1717 (1982), provides that no tract of land may be disposed of under the Act, whether by sale, exchange, or donation, to any person who is not a citizen of the United States, or in the case of a corporation, is not subject to the laws of any state or of the United States. A trustee who is a citizen of the United States is not a proper exchange proponent under sec. 207 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1717 (1982), where all beneficiaries of the trust are aliens.

Sec. 206(a) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1716(b) (1982), authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to exchange public lands or any interest therein if the public interest will be well served by such exchange.

Sec. 206(b) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1716(b) (1982), provides that the values of lands exchanged by the Secretary under the Act shall be equal, or if not equal, shall be equalized by the payment of money to the grantor or to the Secretary, as the circumstances require, so long as payment does not exceed 25 percent of the total value of the lands or interests transferred out of Federal ownership.

GENERALLY

The language of sec. 601(f) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1781(f) (1982), was intended by Congress to have application to patents issued to mining claims which had been perfected after passage of the Act. A patent to a mining claim which had been perfected prior to passage of the Act should, therefore, not contain the restrictive language contemplated by sec. 601(f).

Lee Chemicals, 86 IBLA 164 (Apr. 25, 1985)

The Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744(a)(2) (1982), and 43 CFR 3833.1-2 require that a mining claimant file with BLM a description of the location of the mining claim sufficient to locate the claimed lands. Where a mining claimant fails to provide such a description with the recordation of the claim, BLM may properly require the filing of such a description within a certain period of time. The failure by the mining claimant to comply with such a request may be considered grounds for declaring the claim abandoned and void in accordance with 43 CFR 3833.4; however, where the claimant provides a map, narrative, or sketch of sufficient detail to identify and locate the claims on the ground, it is improper to declare the claims abandoned and void.

The purposes of applying FLPMA's filing provisions to claims located before the Act was passed--to rid Federal lands of stale mining claims and to provide for centralized collection by Federal land managers of comprehensive and up-to-date information on the status of recorded but unpatented mining claims--are clearly legitimate and, therefore, application of these provisions to claims located prior to FLPMA is permissible.

The Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744(b) (1982) and 43 CFR 3833.1-2 require that a mining claimant file with BLM a description of the location of the mining claim sufficient to locate the claimed lands on the ground. This description shall recite, to the extent possible, the section(s), the approximate location of all or any part of the claim to within a 160-acre quadrant of the section (or sections, if more than one is involved), and the township, range, meridian, and State obtained from an official survey plat or other U.S. Government map showing either the surveyed or protracted U.S. Government grid, whichever is applicable. Where a mining claimant fails to provide such a description with the recordation of the claim, BLM may properly require the filing of such a description within a certain period of time. The failure by the mining claimant to comply with such a request may be considered grounds for declaring the claim abandoned and void in accordance with 43 CFR 3833.4(b).

Where the Bureau of Land Management fails to notify a millsite claimant of a defective filing, and to request curative data prior to the time annual notices are submitted in subsequent years, BLM has effectively waived the defective filing and may not declare the millsite claim abandoned and void because of the absence of that document from the file.

Evidence that a mining claimant possesses a return receipt card or certified mail receipt indicating there was a timely filing of a document with BLM and there is no evidence that the claimant filed any other document with BLM on that date serves to rebut the presumption of non-filing which is customarily applied where BLM's records indicate a required filing has not occurred. Although the nature of the document received by BLM is not described on the receipt or card, the existence of this proof indicates that, more likely than not, a required document was in fact received by BLM.

The pendency of contest or condemnation proceedings does not excuse a claim owner from the statutory filing requirements. BLM has no affirmative obligation to send a mining claim owner a reminder notice concerning the need to make annual filings required by 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982).

Jean Emanuel Hatton, Eva M. Pool, Phillip Emanuel, 107 IBLA 47 (Jan. 27, 1989)

Evidence that a mining claimant possesses a return receipt card or certified mail receipt indicating there was a timely filing of a document with BLM serves to rebut the presumption of nonfiling which is customarily applied where BLM's records indicate a required filing has not occurred, absent a showing by BLM that the claimant filed any other document on that date. Although the nature of the document received by BLM is not described on the receipt or card, the existence of this proof indicates it is more probable than not that the required document was received by BLM.

Sydney Green, 109 IBLA 19 (May 24, 1989)

Upon receipt in 1986 of an affidavit alleging the performance of labor and improvements as annual assessment work for 1985, BLM should have notified the mining claimant that such affidavit was deficient and allowed the claimant the opportunity to submit a proper document.

The language of sec. 601(f) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1781(f) (1982), was intended by Congress to have application to patents issued to mining claims which had been perfected after passage of the Act. A patent to a mining claim which had been perfected prior to passage of the Act should, therefore, not contain the restrictive language contemplated by sec. 601(f).

An applicant for conveyance of Federally owned mineral interests under sec. 209(b)(1) of FLPMA, 43 U.S.C. § 1719(b)(1) (1982), must show the surface of the land applied for is owned by the applicant. Where the applicant does not deposit the requested administrative costs as required by 43 CFR 2720.1-3(b)(1), the application is properly rejected.

Sec. 209(a) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1719 (1982), requires that all conveyances of title issued by the Secretary, with certain express exceptions, reserve to the United States all minerals in the land, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the minerals under applicable law and such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe. The fact that there existed no outstanding mineral interests of record as of the

Sec. 209 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (FLPMA), 43 U.S.C. § 1719 (1982), provides that conveyances of title issued by the Department for sales pursuant to sec. 203 of FLPMA, 43 U.S.C. § 1713 (1982), shall reserve to the United States all minerals in the lands, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the minerals under applicable law and such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe. In the absence of regulations expressly approving the location of mining claims for the locatable minerals reserved upon the patenting of lands under sec. 203, mining claims located on such lands are properly declared null and void ab initio.

CORRECTION OF CONVEYANCE DOCUMENTS

Where one holding a patent from the United States applies to have the patent corrected to eliminate a reservation in accordance with sec. 316 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1746 (1982), alleging that the purpose for the reservation no longer exists, the application is properly rejected where the record shows the reservation was not erroneously included in the patent on the basis of a mistake of fact.

BLM may properly reject an application to correct a homestead patent to include certain land where, although the original patentee may have intended to enter that land, the applicant acquired the patented homestead with a specific disclaimer of any transfer of the land and, thus, has no equitable interest in the land.

Arthur Warren Jones et al., 97 IBLA 253 (May 13, 1987)

Under sec. 316 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1746 (1982), the Secretary has authority to correct errors in patent documents at any time correction is deemed necessary or appropriate. However, only mistakes of fact may be corrected, not mistakes of law, and a patent may not be corrected without the consent of the patentee.

Where a Government patent provides that land is conveyed subject to existing access, a dispute between private parties regarding a right of access cannot be adjudicated by BLM, and correction of the patent by BLM to define more clearly that access, against the wishes of the patentee, is improper.

Lone Star Steel Co., et al., 101 IBLA 369 (Mar. 29, 1988)

Under sec. 316 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1746 (1982), the Secretary has authority to correct errors in patent documents at any time correction is deemed necessary or appropriate. However, in correcting errors under this statutory authority, only mistakes of fact may be corrected, not mistakes of law.

Before action may be taken to correct a patent pursuant to 43 U.S.C. § 1746 (1982), the applicant for correction must show that an error in fact was made. Once the existence of an error in fact is shown, consideration may be given to matters of equity and justice which warrant amendment of the patent.

Shoshone & Arapahoe Tribes, 102 IBLA 256 (May 23, 1988)
95 I.D. 64

The Secretary has the authority to issue corrective patents when necessary to eliminate errors. A party seeking a corrective patent initiates the proceeding by filing an application asserting ownership of lands described in and based upon a patent or other document containing an alleged error. However, when the error does not lie in the patent or other document under which the applicant is asserting ownership, but lies in a patent issued to another party, the Secretary does not have authority to correct the other party's patent.

DISCLAIMERS OF INTEREST

Notwithstanding a finding that the United States has no right, title, or interest in or to the lands at issue, an application by the owner of record for a recordable disclaimer of interest by the United States pursuant to 43 U.S.C. § 1745 (1982) must be rejected where the record shows that more than 12 years have elapsed since the owner/applicant and his predecessors knew or should have known of the alleged claim attributed to the United States, because 43 CFR 1864.1-3 mandates rejection of such applications.

Robert R. Perry, 87 IBLA 380 (June 28, 1985)

A reservation of oil and gas in lands patented under sec. 1 of the Act of July 17, 1914, as amended, 30 U.S.C. § 121 (1982), is properly held to include carbon dioxide, a nonhydrocarbon gas produced from a gas well as a component of the naturally formed gases indigenous to the underlying reservoir. Hence, an application for recordable disclaimer of interest in

EXCHANGES

Where the proponent of a land exchange raises substantial questions concerning the accuracy of a BLM appraisal of the value of the selected land, including the use of appropriate comparable sales, the need to apply a discount to financed transactions and the extent of adjustments to assure comparability for the cost of bringing in utilities and modifying topography, the case will be referred to the Hearings Division for a fact-finding hearing.

Fallon Ice & Cold Storage Co., Willow Lane Corp.,
85 IBLA 224 (Feb. 28, 1985)

Where the record in a private exchange case reflects that BLM considered the wildlife values of the public lands subject to exchange and determined them to be not significant, a claim that such lands are of critical importance to wildlife cannot be sustained where there is a failure to provide persuasive evidence that BLM's analysis of the wildlife values is improper.

The denial of a protest to a private land exchange will be upheld where BLM determines that the public interest is well served by proceeding with the exchange and the protestant fails to show BLM erred in that determination.

Where the Environmental Assessment/Land Report of a private land exchange reflects that BLM considered the alternative of imposing a conservation easement or land use covenant to protect wildlife values on the public land subject to exchange, but BLM's analysis results in the conclusion that such a restriction is not warranted, such a determination will not be overturned in the absence of a showing of error.

Nat'l Wildlife Federation et al., 87 IBLA 271 (June 25, 1985)

Where BLM denies a protest to a proposed private land exchange, it must inform the protestant of its right to appeal. The right of appeal is not dependent upon BLM's determination of whether the protestant claims ownership of public lands in the proposal or holds a valid existing contract, permit or lease for those lands. Denial of a protest makes the protestant a "party to a case" within the meaning of 43 CFR 4.410. Whether a party to a case has an interest which has been adversely affected by the BLM decision is a matter to be decided by the Board of Land Appeals on appeal.

Where BLM denies a request by a private land owner for access across Federal lands selected in a private exchange proposal on the basis that historical access to the private lands has been across other private lands not associated with the exchange and that the requested access would provide no public benefit, such a determination will be upheld where the one seeking access fails to establish error in the BLM determination.

The specific language of 25 U.S.C. § 640d-10(b) (1982), providing that BLM lands anywhere within Arizona and New Mexico may be used for purposes of exchanging for lands within 18 miles of the boundary of the Navajo Reservation, is an exception to that general prohibition and is, thus, controlling.

The exchange regulations at 43 CFR Part 2200 apply to exchanges made pursuant to 25 U.S.C. § 640d-10 (1982). While those regulations set forth specific information requirements to be included in notices of realty action, a deficient notice does not negate an exchange thereunder, where the person asserting the deficiency had notice of the exchanges, the opportunity to comment, and was not prejudiced by BLM's failure to provide complete information therein.

LAND USE PLANNING

Approval of an activity plan, such as a recreation management plan compiled to implement a resource management plan amendment, is a decision appealable to the Board of Land Appeals. However, approval or amendment of a resource management plan is by regulation 43 CFR 1610.5-2 subject to review only by the Director, Bureau of Land Management, whose decision is final for the Department of the Interior.

A BLM decision regarding competing uses of public land that is based on a consideration of all relevant factors and is supported by the record will not be disturbed on appeal absent a showing of compelling reasons for modification or reversal. Relevant factors for consideration in a BLM decision opening an area of the Panamint Dunes within a wilderness study area in the California Desert Conservation Area to off-road vehicle use are whether such activity will impair the area's suitability for wilderness preservation or whether unnecessary or undue degradation of the lands

A BLM decision to designate certain roads within the King Range National Conservation Area as open to unrestricted or limited vehicle use by the general public will not be disturbed on appeal absent a showing of compelling reasons for modification or reversal. However, where a portion of the King Range has been designated a wilderness study area, relevant factors for consideration of whether to open the area to off-road vehicle use must include whether such activity will impair the area's suitability for wilderness preservation or whether unnecessary or undue degradation of the lands and their resources will take place. Where the record does not support the road opening because it reveals the threat of unnecessary degradation of the natural and cultural resources, the decision will be reversed.

California Wilderness Coalition et al., 101 IBLA 18 (Jan. 25, 1988)

In a petition for reconsideration of a Board decision closing roads within the King Range Wilderness Study Area to off-road vehicle use, BLM offered new evidence to show that it increased its law enforcement capability in the area and has purchased property in order to better control illegal off-road vehicle use. BLM may properly place the holder of a special recreation permit for commercial use of a wild and scenic river on a probationary status where the evidence establishes that the permittee gave his trip card to someone other than a bona fide employee, who then conducted the scheduled trip, thereby effecting a partial assignment of his permit in violation of the stipulations incorporated in his permit.

PLAN OF OPERATIONS

The surface management regulations at 43 CFR Subpart 3809 implement the mandate of sec. 302(b) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 to manage the public lands to prevent unnecessary and undue degradation. A decision of BLM requiring a mining claimant to operate under an approved plan of operations on the basis that mining operations would cause a cumulative surface disturbance in excess of 5 acres during a calendar year will be affirmed where appellant fails to sustain the burden of showing that 5 acres or less is involved. Although the regulations governing reclamation of disturbed areas permit deferral of reclamation for legitimate mining purposes, unreclaimed surface disturbance from a prior year's operation is properly included in the acreage computation for purposes of determining whether a plan of operations is required.

exception allowing use of an off-road vehicle in the area or on the trail.

During the period a wilderness study area is being reviewed so that the Secretary may make his recommendation to the President as to the area's suitability or nonsuitability for preservation as wilderness, and until Congress has reached its decision on the matter, BLM is required to manage the lands so as not to impair their suitability for preservation as wilderness. When a plan of operations is rejected by BLM because the proposed activity will impair the area's suitability for preservation as wilderness, the question on review is whether the decision was reasonable and is supported by the record. If so, absent some showing of error by the appellant, the decision will be affirmed.

Manville Sales Corp., 102 IBLA 385 (June 17, 1988)

After receiving assertions by local Indians that an area being considered for a mining exploration project was within an area of historical and cultural significance to the Indians, BLM undertook an investigation which included a search of historical records, a class III cultural inventory report, and consultation and joint field examination with the Indians. Based upon the information obtained, BLM determined that the project area was not within a district or site included in or eligible for inclusion in the National Register of Historic Places, and that the mining exploration at the project area would not have an effect on the asserted historical and cultural characteristics of the area. It was proper for BLM to conclude, based on its findings, that a mining plan of operations could properly be approved in accordance with the Surface Management Regulations in 43 CFR 3809 and sec. 106 of the National Historic Preservation Act, as amended, 16 U.S.C. § 470(f) (1982).

When recommending that the State of Montana approve a mining plan of operations pursuant to the Surface Management Regulations in 43 CFR 3809 and a memorandum of understanding between BLM and the State of Montana, BLM did not fail to comply with the American Indian Religious Freedom Act (AIRFA), 42 U.S.C. § 1996 (1982). The record shows that BLM made a good faith effort to obtain and consider the views of the Indians and determined, based on the record, that the operations set out in the mining plan would not unnecessarily interfere with American Indian religious values and practices and would not prevent the Indians from access to their religious sites. BLM's action was in accord with the policy and requirements of AIRFA.

The Blackfeet Tribe, 103 IBLA 228 (July 26, 1988)

The Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1782(c) (1982), requires the Secretary to regulate mining operations on lands under wilderness review to prevent impairment of the suitability of these areas for potential inclusion in the wilderness system. However, if mining operations on such lands may continue, if the operations are occurring in the same manner and degree as on Oct. 21, 1976. A mining plan of operations for claims located after Oct. 21, 1976, even though those claims embrace the same lands covered by different claims located prior to Oct. 21, 1976, cannot be considered to be a continuation of any operations undertaken pursuant to the previous claims and cannot qualify for the less restrictive management standard.

Approval of a mining plan of operations for post-FLPMA mining claims within a wilderness study area may properly be denied when planned road building and blasting impacts could not be rendered substantially unnoticeable before a final wilderness designation decision is made.

RECORDATION OF AFFIDAVIT OF ASSESSMENT WORK OR NOTICE OF INTENTION TO HOLD MINING CLAIM

The Supreme Court has definitively established in United States v. Locke, 53 U.S.L.W. 4433 (Apr. 2, 1985), that the provisions of sec. 314 of FLPMA, which provide that, upon the failure of a mining claimant to timely file annually either evidence of the performance of annual assessment work or a notice of intention to hold a mining claim, the claim is conclusively deemed abandoned and void, is constitutional and does not result in a deprivation of due process of law.

Lanny Ray Southard, 86 IBLA 239 (Apr. 30, 1985)

where a mining claimant apparently inadvertently omits the serial number of two claims from the affidavit of annual labor and there is no other means of identifying the claims on the document, BLM properly declares the claims abandoned and void for failure to comply with 43 CFR 3833.2.

Arley R. Taylor, 86 IBLA 283 (May 13, 1985)

Under the provisions of 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), an owner of an unpatented mining claim must file evidence of annual assessment work or notice of intention to hold prior to Dec. 31 of each year. Such filings must be made within each calendar year, i.e., on or after Jan. 1 and on or before Dec. 30. Failure to file within the calendar year properly results in the claim being extinguished, and therefore abandoned and void.

Charles H. Hagerty, 87 IBLA 23 (May 21, 1985)

Under sec. 314 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), the owner of an unpatented mining claim located on public land must file a notice of intention to hold the mining claim or evidence of annual assessment work on the claim prior to Dec. 31 of each year in the proper office of the Bureau of Land Management. There is no provision for waiver of this mandatory requirement, and where evidence of assessment work is not timely filed, for whatever reason, the consequence must be borne by the claimant.

The Supreme Court has definitively established in United States v. Locke, 105 S. Ct. 1785 (1985), that the provisions of sec. 314 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, which provide that, upon the failure of a mining claimant to timely file annually either evidence of the performance of annual assessment work or a notice of intention to hold a mining claim, the claim is conclusively deemed abandoned and void, is constitutional and does not result in a deprivation of due process of law.

Charlene & Robert Schilling, 87 IBLA 52 (May 23, 1985)

Failure to file evidence of annual assessment work in calendar year 1981 for a mining claim located before Oct. 21, 1976, as required by sec. 314(a) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744(a) (1982), and 43 CFR 3833.2-1(a) (1981), constitutes abandonment of the claim and renders it void. Personal delivery of such evidence after regular business hours on Dec. 30, 1981, does not constitute compliance with the recordation requirement where the document is deemed by 43 CFR 1821.2-2(d) to have been filed on the next business day, Dec. 31.

United States v. Richard R. Ballas, 87 IBLA 88 (May 30, 1985)

BLM may properly declare an unpatented mining claim located prior to 1982 abandoned and void under sec. 314 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), where the owner failed to file either evidence of annual assessment work or a notice of intention to hold the claim with BLM on or before Dec. 30, 1982.

The presumption that BLM employees have not lost or misplaced evidence of annual assessment work for an unpatented mining claim, required to be filed by a certain date under sec. 314(a) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744(a) (1982), will not be overcome by an affidavit that the document was mailed with another document which was received.

RECORDATION OF AFFIDAVIT OF ASSESSMENT WORK OR NOTICE OF INTENTION TO HOLD MINING CLAIM--Continued

When Congress enacted sec. 314 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), it intended to distinguish those claims for which timely filings were not made. Evidence of subjective intent to hold the claims is not relevant, as the failure to file an affidavit of assessment work or notice of intent to hold in a timely manner, in and of itself, causes the claim to be lost. The statute specifically provides that failure to comply with applicable filing requirements leads automatically to loss of the claim.

For the purposes of 43 CFR 3833.2-1, "timely filing" means being filed within the time period prescribed by law, or received by Jan. 19, after the period prescribed by law, in an envelope bearing a clear postmark affixed by the United States Postal Service bearing a date within the period prescribed by law. When documents submitted for filing have been lost in the mail and thus not received by BLM, such loss must be borne by the claimant.

Paul E. Hammond, 87 IBLA 139 (June 10, 1985)

To comply with 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), the owner of an unpatented mining claim located on public land must file his evidence of annual assessment work on the claim prior to Dec. 31 of each year in the proper office of BLM. By regulation 43 CFR 3833.0-5(m), the Department has considered such documents to be timely filed if placed in an envelope postmarked by the United States Postal Service on or before Dec. 30 and received in the proper BLM office on or before the following Jan. 19. Where the envelope containing the necessary documentation is postmarked Dec. 31, the claim is properly declared abandoned and void.

RECORDATION OF AFFIDAVIT OF ASSESSMENT WORK OR NOTICE

BLM may not declare an unpatented mining claim abandoned and void for failure to file a notice of intention to hold the claim with both the local recording office and BLM on or before Oct. 22, 1979, where the claimant has already filed within the 3-year period following Oct. 21, 1976, pursuant to sec. 314(a) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744(a) (1982), thereby initiating the statutory requirement to file prior to Dec. 31 of each year thereafter.

Bernice Sheldon, 87 IBLA 161 (June 11, 1985)

In United States v. Locke, 105 S. Ct. 1785 (1985), the United States Supreme Court held that sec. 314 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), is constitutional. Sec. 314 provides that upon the failure of a mining claimant to timely file either evidence of the performance of annual assessment work or a notice of intention to hold a mining claim, the claim is conclusively presumed to be abandoned and void. Therefore, a mining claimant is not deprived of due process where his claim is rendered abandoned and void for failure to timely make the required filing.

Myron Cherry, 87 IBLA 165 (June 12, 1985)

BLM may properly declare an unpatented mining claim located after Oct. 21, 1976, abandoned and void where the claimant failed to file either evidence of annual assessment work or a notice of intention to hold the claim prior to Dec. 31 of the year following the year in which the claim was located, as required by sec. 314(a) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744(a) (1982).

Sec. 314(a) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744(a) (1982), requires the owner of an unpatented mining claim located prior to Oct. 21, 1976, to file evidence of annual assessment work or notice of intention to hold with the Bureau of Land Management on or before Oct. 22, 1979, and on or before Dec. 30 of each year thereafter. Under the provisions of 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), an owner of an unpatented mining claim must file evidence of annual assessment work or notice of intention to hold prior to Dec. 31 of each year. Such filings must be made within each calendar year, i.e., on or after Jan. 1 and on or before Dec. 30. Since sec. 314 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 applies only to public lands of the United States, the filing and recording requirements of sec. 314 do not apply to such legislatively conveyed lands, and the statutory filing requirements may not be relied upon to invalidate or otherwise determine the status of unpatented mining claims located on such conveyed lands.

Melvin N. Barry, Frank Simpson, 97 IBLA 359 (May 26, 1987)

The Bureau of Land Management lacks jurisdiction to adjudicate the status of unpatented mining claims located on lands subsequently selected by the State of Alaska and tentatively approved by BLM which lands were thereafter conveyed to the State by sec. 906(c)(1) of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act. Hence, a decision declaring such claims null and void will be reversed. Since such lands are no longer Federal lands, a decision refusing to accept assessment work filings for such claims will be affirmed.

William J. Smith, 94 IBLA 75 (Sept. 30, 1986)

Under sec. 314 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), the owner of an unpatented mining claim located on public land must file a notice of intention to hold the mining claim or evidence of performance of assessment work on the claim prior to Dec. 31 of each year. Failure to file one of the two instruments within the prescribed period conclusively constitutes an abandonment of the claim. Filing or recording the required document with the county or local recording district does not constitute compliance with the requirement that it be filed with BLM, and an uncorroborated statement that BLM timely received the required document does not overcome the presumption that administrative officials are presumed to have properly discharged their duties and not lost or misplaced legally significant documents submitted for filing.

Under sec. 314 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), the failure of a holder of a mill or tunnel site claim to file an annual notice of intention to hold the site claim is a curable defect. Where BLM fails to notify a mill or tunnel site claimant of a defective filing and to request curative data prior to subsequent filing of annual notices, BLM has effectively waived the defective filing and may not declare the site abandoned and void because of the absence of that document from the file.

Ruth Irene Hackathorn, 94 IBLA 194 (Oct. 30, 1986)

An unpatented mining claim located after Oct. 21, 1976, is properly declared abandoned and void where the claimant failed to file either an affidavit of annual assessment work, a notice of intention to hold the claim, or a detailed report under 30 U.S.C. § 28-1 (1982) prior to Dec. 31, regardless of whether the claimant was entitled to or granted deferment of annual assessment work.

Marcus D. Schneider, 94 IBLA 239 (Nov. 12, 1986)

There is a rebuttable presumption that administrative officers properly discharge their duties and do not lose or misfile documents. However, when the computer printout listing the documents filed for a mining claim lists an affidavit of assessment work as having been timely filed, that evidence will overcome the presumption that the document was not filed arising from its not being in the case file.

Where the requirement of annually filing proof of assessment work or a notice of intention to hold applies, such filing must be made within each calendar year, i.e., on or after Jan. 1 and on or before Dec. 30.

The submission of a plan of operations pursuant to 43 CFR 3809 does not satisfy the requirement of filing an affidavit of assessment work or notice of intention to hold a claim imposed by 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982).

Robert C. LeFaivre, 95 IBLA 26 (Dec. 12, 1986)

Neither 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982) nor the regulations at 43 CFR 3833 require a mineral locator to submit proof of chain of title to BLM. The regulation at 43 CFR 3833.4 provides that failure to file information after notice from BLM as to a deficiency may lead to a determination that a claim is void, but application of the rule is explicitly limited to the information requirements of the regulatory provisions listed in the subsection. The regulatory procedure for dealing with curable defects applies only when information sought by BLM is required by regulation. It does not apply to other information BLM might believe would be useful to its administration of mining claim records so as to permit invalidation of a claim for reasons not enumerated by statute or regulation.

Although 43 U.S.C. § 1744(a) does not prescribe the form a notice of intention to hold a mining claim must take, not every document sent to BLM from which intent might be inferred is sufficient. Rather, whatever the form of the instrument, it must be filed with BLM as a notice of intent. It must indicate that the claim owner continues to have an interest in the claim. It must also be a copy of the document which was or will be recorded with the county or local recorder's office. The instrument must also include a description of the location of the mining claim sufficient to locate the claimed lands on the ground, the BLM assigned claim number, or the name of the claim.

RECORDATION OF AFFIDAVIT OF ASSESSMENT WORK OR NOTICE OF INTENTION TO HOLD MINING CLAIM--Continued

BLM is not estopped from declaring an unpatented mining claim located prior to Oct. 21, 1976, abandoned and void for failure to file a copy of an affidavit of assessment work or a notice of intention to hold the claim with BLM on or before Oct. 22, 1979, because BLM has delayed issuing such a declaration for a number of years.

John Robert Maytag, 95 IBLA 128 (Jan. 6, 1987)

The presumption that BLM employees have not lost or misplaced evidence of annual assessment work for an unpatented mining claim, required to be filed on or before Dec. 30, 1981, under sec. 314(a) of FLPMA, 43 U.S.C. § 1744(a) (1982), will not be overcome by proof that BLM mishandled evidence of annual assessment work filed during the 1984 calendar year.

BLM may properly declare an unpatented mining claim abandoned and void under sec. 314 of FLPMA, 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), where the owner fails to timely file with BLM either evidence of annual assessment work or a notice of intention to hold the claim on or before Dec. 30 of any calendar year following the first filing of such evidence or notice.

Not every document filed with BLM from which intent might be inferred is sufficient to meet the statutory and regulatory requirements for notices of intention to hold mining claims. Such a document must be filed as a notice of intent and meet those requirements.

The failure to file an annual notice of intention to hold a millsite claim is a curable defect, and BLM may not declare a millsite claim abandoned and void without first according the claimant an opportunity to comply with a notice of deficiency.

Steve E. Cate, 97 IBLA 27 (Apr. 23, 1987)

BLM may properly declare an unpatented mining claim located after Oct. 21, 1976, abandoned and void where the claimant failed to file either evidence of annual assessment work or a notice of intention to hold the claim prior to Dec. 31 of the year following the year in which the claim was located, as required by sec. 314(a) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744(a) (1982).

Where the requirement of filing proof of assessment work or a notice of intention to hold applies, such filing must be made within each calendar year, i.e., on or after Jan. 1 and on or before Dec. 30.

Ronald Willden, 97 IBLA 40 (Apr. 23, 1987)

Departmental regulation 43 CFR 3833.0-5(m), promulgated in Dec. 1982, treats as "timely filed" a mining claim recordation document received by the Bureau of Land Management within 20 days of the statutory deadline for annual mining claim recordation filings if transmitted in an envelope bearing a clearly dated postmark affixed by the United States Postal Service denoting the document was mailed on or before Dec. 30 of the filing year. This regulation took effect Dec. 30, 1982, and in accordance with United States v. Locke, 471 U.S. 84, 102 n.14 (1985), it cannot be applied retroactively.

Sec. 314(a) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744(a) (1982), requires the owner of an unpatented mining claim located prior to Oct. 21, 1976, to file evidence of annual assessment work or notice of intention to hold with the Bureau of Land Management on or before Oct. 22, 1979, and on or before Dec. 30 of each year thereafter. This requirement is mandatory and the failure to comply is deemed conclusively to constitute an abandonment of the claim by the owner and render the claim void.

Although 43 U.S.C. § 1744(a) does not prescribe the form a notice of intention to hold a mining claim must take, not every document sent to BLM from which intent might be inferred is sufficient. Whatever the form of the instrument, it must be filed with BLM as a notice of intent to hold, indicating that the claim owner continues to have an interest in the claim. The instrument must also include a description of the location of the mining claim sufficient to locate the claimed lands on the ground, the BLM assigned claim number, or the name of the claim. It must also be evident that a copy of the document was or will be recorded with the county or local recorder's office.

Sec. 314(a) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744(a) (1982), requires the owner of a lode or placer mining claim located prior to its enactment on Oct. 21, 1976, to file with BLM "within the three-year period following the date of the approval of this Act and prior to Dec. 31 of each year thereafter," a copy of either a notice of intention to hold the mining claim or an affidavit of assessment work. The phrase "each year thereafter" refers to the years following the calendar year in which either evidence of assessment work or a notice of intention to hold the claim was first filed.

In order for a document filed with BLM to qualify under 43 U.S.C. § 1744(a) (1982) as a notice of intention to hold a mining claim, the document must have been filed with BLM as a notice of intent, must be a copy of a document that was or will be filed with the local jurisdiction where the claim's location certificate was recorded, and must identify the claim

J. L. Block, 98 IBLA 209 (July 1, 1987)

Sec. 314 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), and 43 CFR 3833.2-1, require the owner of an unpatented mining claim located on public land to file evidence of assessment work performed or a notice of intention to hold the mining claim with the proper BLM office prior to Dec. 31 of each year. Failure to file one of the two instruments within the prescribed time period conclusively constitutes an abandonment of the mining claim.

Under 43 CFR 3833.4(b), the failure of a holder of a mill or tunnel site claim to timely file an annual notice of intention to hold the claim is a curable defect. However, this regulation applies only to those documents not specifically required under sec. 314 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982). The holder of an unpatented placer or lode mining claim cannot rely on this regulation to cure his failure to timely file a notice of intention to hold the mining claim, because the requirement to file annual documents for a lode or placer mining claim is a statutory requirement of sec. 314 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982).

The owner of a mining claim located after Oct. 21, 1976, is required by sec. 314 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), to file a notice of intention to hold the claim or evidence of assessment work performed on the claim, in the county where the location notice is of record and in the proper office of BLM prior to Dec. 31 of each year following the calendar year in which the claim is located. Failure to file the instrument required by the statute constitutes an abandonment of the claim.

With respect to an unpatented mining claim located after Oct. 21, 1976, the fact that the requirement for performing assessment work under the mining law has not yet accrued does not obviate the necessity of filing either a notice of intention to hold the claim or evidence of assessment work both in the local recording office where the notice of location is recorded and in the proper office of BLM prior to Dec. 31 of the year following the calendar year in which the claim was located, as required by sec. 314 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982).

Oliver B. Kilroy, 99 IBLA 33 (Aug. 31, 1987)

Where a mining claimant inadvertently omits the name and serial number of unpatented mining claims from the notice of intention to hold and there is no other means of identifying the claims on the document, BLM properly declares the claims abandoned and void for failure to comply with 43 CFR 3833.2. Although a filing may be supplemented by subsequent submission of information not required by statute without a statutory presumption of abandonment, there is no authority for amendment of the notice of intention to hold to include a previously omitted claim after the filing deadline.

RECORDATION OF AFFIDAVIT OF ASSESSMENT WORK OR NOTICE OF INTENTION TO HOLD MINING CLAIM--Continued

The regulation at 43 CFR 3833.2-1(a)(1), governing the filing of an affidavit of assessment work pursuant to sec. 314 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744(a) (1982), provides that the affidavit should reflect the BLM serial numbers of the claims covered by the affidavit. A typographical error in one of the serial numbers of a series of claims identified in a timely filed affidavit will not support a finding of abandonment where the book and page of recordation of the claims previously provided to BLM is also identified in the affidavit and is adequate to identify the claims described.

Homer F. Wilson, 101 IBLA 70 (Jan. 29, 1988)

Evidence that a mining claimant possesses a return receipt card or certified mail receipt indicating there was a timely filing of a document with BLM and there is no evidence that the claimant filed any other document with BLM on that date serves to rebut the presumption of non-filing which is customarily applied where BLM's records indicate a required filing has not occurred. Although the nature of the document received by BLM is not described on the receipt or card, the existence of this proof indicates that, more likely than not, a required document was in fact received by BLM.

Richard A. Willers, 101 IBLA 106 (Feb. 2, 1988)

Sec. 314(a) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744(a) (1982), and the applicable Departmental regulations (43 CFR Subpart 3833), require that the owner of an unpatented mining claim, located on public land prior to Oct. 21, 1976, must file, with the local recording office where the claim is recorded and with the proper BLM office, on or before Dec. 30 in each calendar year following the first filing of either evidence of annual assessment work or a notice of intention to hold the claim, one of those documents. Failure to file the necessary document timely in either office results in a conclusive presumption that the claim has been abandoned

The filing of a defective instrument is not sufficient to satisfy the recordation requirements of 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982).

Joseph L. Frankmore, 101 IBLA 202 (Feb. 22, 1988)

Where it appears that a specifically identified mining claim has been recorded twice with BLM by the same locators, the second time as a relocation, a finding that the claim as relocated is abandoned and void for failure to file evidence of assessment work, on the ground the proof of labor filed with BLM referred only to the serial number assigned to the earlier recordation, will be reversed in the absence of evidence the relocation was adverse to the earlier location rather than an amended location which relates back.

Edward E. Ellis, 101 IBLA 272 (Mar. 10, 1988)

Evidence that a mining claimant possesses an acknowledgment receipt card with an attachment purportedly listing those claims for which annual filings were received during the calendar year in question and the fact that BLM does not challenge her characterization of the evidence serves to rebut the presumption

Luella S. Collins (On Reconsideration), 101 IBLA 399 (Apr. 4, 1988)

BLM's allegedly inconsistent conduct in acknowledging receipt of affidavits of assessment work does not provide the corroboration necessary to overcome the presumption that an administrative official has properly discharged his duties and not lost or misplaced legally significant documents submitted for filing.

Willis B. Grossardt, 102 IBLA 212 (May 10, 1988)

BLM may properly declare an unpatented mining claim abandoned and void when a claimant fails to file either evidence of annual assessment work or a notice of intent to hold the claim on or before Dec. 30 of a calendar year.

The grace period afforded by 43 CFR 3833.0-5(m) extends only to those documents delivered by the U.S. Postal Service, and does not apply to a document delivered to BLM by a private courier.

Victor Shepherd, 102 IBLA 334 (June 3, 1988)

BLM properly declares a mining claim abandoned and void pursuant to sec. 314 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744(a) (1982), where a mining claimant files a single affidavit of assessment work for a group of claims but omits the name and serial number of a claim and the affidavit provides no other means of identifying the omitted claim.

A decision declaring a mining claim to be abandoned and void pursuant to sec. 314 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), will be reversed if the mining claimant had filed an affidavit of assessment work for a group of claims that properly listed the BLM

Failure to file affidavits of assessment work or notice of intent to hold, prior to Dec. 31 as required by 43 U.S.C. § 1744(a) (1982), constitutes abandonment of the claims and they may be declared void by BLM.

Donald E. Stewart, 104 IBLA 48 (Aug. 23, 1988)

Congress assigned the owner of the mining claim the responsibility of making the filings required by 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), and the owner must bear the consequence of filings not timely made.

Under 43 CFR 3833.2-4, a mining claimant is excused from filing evidence of annual assessment work or a notice of intention to hold his claim only if a proper application for a mineral patent is filed and the final certificate has been issued. The pendency of contest or condemnation proceedings does not excuse a claim owner from the statutory filing requirements.

BLM has no affirmative obligation to send a mining claim owner a reminder notice concerning the

Russell Hoffman v. Bureau of Land Management, 104 IBLA 238 (Nov. 4, 1988)

Where an annual filing document has been submitted to an office not authorized to receive it, the filing requirements of sec. 314 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), have not been complied with. As a claimant is responsible to comply with the statute, and the Department is without authority to excuse a lack of compliance, the failure of an office receiving misdirected filing to promptly notify the claimant of the situation does not waive the statutory consequences for failure to timely file the required document in the proper office.

Gold Leaf Enterprises, 105 IBLA 282 (Nov. 7, 1988)

The Department has long followed the rule that transmission of a document to a party's last address of record by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, constitutes constructive service even though delivery was unsuccessful. Unless a final certificate has been issued, an applicant for a patent to mining claim is not excused under 43 CFR 3833.2-4 from the requirement to file annually an affidavit of assessment work or notice of intention to hold the claim with BLM under 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982).

The purchase price for lands covered by an application for mineral patent is not properly submitted until after it is established that no adverse claim or other objection appears. Where the record establishes that there were significant problems with a patent application requiring resolution before purchase money could properly be tendered and acceptance of mineral patent, the premature payment and acceptance of mineral patent purchase price neither creates any right to receive certificate of title nor lifts the obligation to comply with the recordation provisions of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976.

BLM properly rejects a patent application for mining claims which have become invalid because the claimant failed to file a copy of his affidavit of assessment work as required by 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982).

By regulation 43 CFR 3833.0-5(m), the Department considers such documents to be timely filed if placed in an envelope postmarked by the U.S. Postal Service on or before Dec. 30 and received in the proper BLM office on or before the following Jan. 19. Gary Hennis, 108 IBLA 121 (Mar. 30, 1989)

Under 43 U.S.C. § 1744(a) (1982), as implemented by the provisions of 43 CFR 3833.2-3, the mining claim recordation document filed with the Bureau of Land Management by a mining claimant as a notice of intention to hold the claim must be "an exact legible reproduction or duplicate, except microfilm, of an instrument" which was or will be filed for record with the local recording district. There is no evidence in this case that the documents cited by claimant as notice of intention to hold constitute copies of documents he had filed or intended to file with the local recording district.

Albert H. Corliss, 108 IBLA 152 (Apr. 7, 1989)

The conclusive presumption of abandonment for failure to comply with the recordation requirements of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744(a) (1982), is self-operative and does not depend upon any act or decision of an administrative official. Where a claim is omitted from the express listing of a group of claims for which annual assessment work was performed but was depicted on a map accompanying the affidavit of assessment work, it is wholly a matter of conjecture whether the claim not specifically identified was intended to be listed as the object of assessment work expenditures.

Where an affidavit of assessment work timely filed with BLM does not include BLM serial numbers as required by 43 CFR 3833.2-2(a)(1), the failure to provide such is curable pursuant to 43 CFR 3833.4, and will not be deemed to invalidate an otherwise sufficient filing under 43 U.S.C. § 1744(a)(2) (1982), absent a showing that the claimant has been given notice and 30 days within which to cure the defect.

Thomas A. Alexander, 108 IBLA 347 (May 12, 1989)

Under sec. 314 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), the owner of an unpatented mining claim located on public land must file a notice of intention to hold the mining claim or evidence of annual assessment work on the claim prior to Dec. 31 of each year in the proper office of the Bureau of Land Management. There is no provision for waiver of this mandatory requirement, and where a notice of intention to hold or evidence of assessment work is not timely filed, for whatever reason, the consequence must be borne by the claimant.

The filing of a quitclaim deed relating to a mining claim does not, standing alone, constitute a notice of intention to hold the mining claim. Such a deed merely evidences present ownership, not an intention to hold in the future.

RECORDATION OF AFFIDAVIT OF ASSESSMENT WORK OR NOTICE OF INTENTION TO HOLD MINING CLAIM--Continued

Evidence that a mining claimant possesses a return receipt card or certified mail receipt indicating there was a timely filing of a document with BLM serves to rebut the presumption of nonfiling which is customarily applied where BLM's records indicate a required filing has not occurred, absent a showing by BLM that the claimant filed any other document on that date. Although the nature of the document received by BLM is not described on the receipt or card, the existence of this proof indicates it is more probable than not that the required document was received by BLM.

Sydney Green, 109 IBLA 19 (May 24, 1989)

BLM may properly declare an unpatented mining claim abandoned and void when a claimant fails to file either evidence of annual assessment work or a notice of intent to hold the claim on or before Dec. 30 of a calendar year.

The provisions of 43 CFR 3833.4(b) apply to the filing of supplemental information not specifically called for in 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), and the filing of notices of intention to hold millsites and tunnel site claims. The latitude set out in 43 CFR 3833.4(b) is not available if no annual filing has been made for a lode or placer mining claim, and, in such case, the Department is without authority to allow a 30-day period after notice for a claimant to file the required documents.

David R. Jacques, 109 IBLA 69 (May 30, 1989)

Failure to file in the proper Bureau of Land Management office either evidence of assessment work performed or notice of intention to hold as required by 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), and 43 CFR 3833.2 within the time period prescribed results in a conclusive presumption of abandonment of the mining claim.

Under 43 CFR 3833.0-5(m), "timely filed" means being filed within the time period prescribed by law, or received by Jan. 19, after the period prescribed by law in an envelope bearing a clearly dated postmark affixed by the United States Postal Service within the period prescribed by law. A proof of labor for a mining claim is timely filed when it was received by January 19, at the Nevada State Office and was in an envelope bearing a clearly dated postmark dated Dec. 26, which is within the period prescribed by law, and BLM's decision declaring the claim abandoned and void is properly reversed.

Failure to file in the proper Bureau of Land Management office either evidence of assessment work performed or notice of intention to hold as required by 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), and 43 CFR 3833.2 within the time period prescribed results in a conclusive presumption of abandonment of the mining claim. Only where a patent application has been filed and a final certificate has been issued will a mining claimant be excused under 43 CFR 3833.2-4 from complying with the filing requirement.

Under 43 CFR 3833.0-5(m), a document which is mailed will be considered timely filed provided it bears a clearly dated postmark affixed by the U.S. Postal Service on or before the filing deadline. the regulation will not apply and the filing is therefore untimely.

Chemical Products Corp., 109 IBLA 357 (June 23, 1989)

Where substantial compliance is a prerequisite for the invocation of equitable adjudication, the principle is not applicable to a mining claim deemed abandoned and void for failure to timely submit the annual filing required under sec. 314 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), because, as the Supreme Court in Locke v. United States, 471 U.S. 84 (1985), held, there is no possibility of substantial compliance where the claimant has failed to comply with the deadline established by Congress. Further, the fact that Congress made sec. 314 self-operative and did not provide the Department with the authority to waive the statutory consequences for failure to comply, dispels the view that Congress intended for a claim deemed abandoned and void to be eligible for reinstatement under some other avenue.

Basic Rock & Sand, Inc. (On Reconsideration), 110 IBLA 1 (July 5, 1989)

An unpatented mining claim is properly declared abandoned and void when a claimant fails to file either evidence of annual assessment work or a notice of intent to hold the claim on or before Dec. 30 of a calendar year.

Doyle C. Cape, 110 IBLA 16 (July 6, 1989)

Upon receipt in 1986 of an affidavit alleging the performance of labor and improvements as annual assessment work for 1985, BLM should have notified the mining claimant that such affidavit was deficient and allowed the claimant the opportunity to submit a proper document.

RECORDATION OF AFFIDAVIT OF ASSESSMENT WORK OR NOTICE OF INTENTION TO HOLD MINING CLAIM--Continued

Under sec. 314(a) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744(a) (1982), the owner of an unpatented mining claim located after Oct. 21, 1976, is required to file evidence of assessment work or notice of intention to hold the claim on or before Dec. 30 of each year following the calendar year in which the claim was located. Failure to so file constitutes abandonment of the claim and renders it void.

A decision declaring a mining claim to be abandoned and void pursuant to sec. 314 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), will be reversed if the mining claimant had filed an affidavit of assessment work for a group of claims that sufficiently identifies that claim.

Use of the term "all contiguous" when appended to a list of mining claims on an affidavit of assessment work, is not sufficient to identify additional claims to comply with sec. 314 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982).

BLM has no affirmative obligation to send a notice to remind a mining claimant of the need to make annual filings or to contract a mining claimant to ascertain which claims are intended to be included in the annual filings required by 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982).

Where BLM has declared some claims void, but not others, apparently on the basis of identical information provided by the claimant in a group affidavit of annual assessment work, and where it is possible the claims would have been identified from information contained in the affidavit, the decision shall be set aside and remanded for further proceedings consistent with the provisions of sec. 314, Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982).

RECORDATION OF MINING CLAIMS AND ABANDONMENT

Where mining claims are located after Oct. 21, 1976, a copy of the notices of location must be filed with the proper office of the Bureau of Land Management within 90 days after the dates of such locations, failing which, the claims must be deemed conclusively to have been abandoned. If, subsequently, the locator files new notices of location bearing a later date, that constitutes a relocation of the former claims, and the new claims date from such relocation. If in the interim between the abandonment of the original claims and the date of their relocation the land is withdrawn, the relocated claims are null and void ab initio.

John W. Finn, 87 IBLA 55 (May 23, 1985)

This Board has no authority to excuse lack of compliance with the statute or to afford relief from the statutory consequences.

Forrest G. Niccum et al., 87 IBLA 129 (June 6, 1985)

Mining claims located prior to July 26, 1866, and recorded in accordance with the rules and customs of local mining districts were subsequently recognized as valid mining claims. Such claims, if they remain unpatented, are subject to the mining claim recordation requirement of sec. 314 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982).

Under the provisions of 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), an owner of an unpatented mining claim must file evidence of annual assessment work or notice of intention to hold prior to Dec. 31 of each year. Such filings must be made within each calendar year, i.e., on or after Jan. 1 and on or before Dec. 30. Failure to file within the calendar year properly results in the claim being extinguished, and therefore abandoned and void.

Failure of a lessee or agent of the owner of an unpatented mining claim to make the filings required by 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982) provides no basis for reversal of a decision declaring the claim abandoned and void. Congress assigned the owner of the claim the responsibility of making the required filings; the owner must bear the consequence of filings not timely made.

Clara Holloway Sampson, 87 IBLA 143 (June 10, 1985)

The Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744(a)(2) (1982), and 43 CFR 3833.1-2 require that a mining claimant file with BLM a description of the location of the mining claim sufficient to locate the claimed lands. Where a mining claimant fails to provide such a description with the recordation of the claim, BLM may properly require the filing of such a description within a certain period of time. The failure by the mining claimant to comply with such a request may be considered grounds for declaring the claim abandoned and void in accordance with 43 CFR 3833.4; however, where the claimant provides a map, narrative, or sketch of sufficient detail to identify and locate the claims on the ground, it is improper to declare the claims abandoned and void.

The statutes and regulations governing the description of a mining claim given in a location certificate filed for recordation with BLM do not require that the locator submit information sufficiently accurate for BLM to determine the precise position of the claim on a township plat. Rather, the proper test is whether the claim may, in fact, be found and identified on the ground by following the information in the recorded description.

Arley Taylor, 90 IBLA 313 (Feb. 25, 1986)

The purposes of applying FLPMA's filing provisions to claims located before the Act was passed--to rid Federal lands of stale mining claims and to provide for centralized collection by Federal land managers of comprehensive and up-to-date information on the status of recorded but unpatented mining claims--are clearly legitimate and, therefore, application of these provisions to claims located prior to FLPMA is permissible.

The text of FLPMA itself provides a mining claimant with effective notice of the annual filing requirements. Individualized notices of filing deadlines are not required by the Constitution.

Where the notice of location for an unpatented millsite is not filed within 90 days of the date of location of the millsite, as required by sec. 314(b) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744(b) (1982), the millsite is thereby rendered void and BLM may properly refuse to accept the notice for recordation.

Todd Frederick & Sharon Frederick, 93 IBLA 289 (Sept. 4, 1986)

A mining claim recordation document sent to the proper office of BLM in an envelope provided by BLM, affixed with the proper postage by weight, and postmarked on or prior to Dec. 30, but returned for additional postage because of the oversize nature of the envelope, will be considered to have been filed in a timely manner pursuant to 43 CFR 3833.0-5(m); when additional postage is affixed, and the letter is received by BLM before Jan. 19 of the following year.

Oro Fino Dredging Co., 94 IBLA 11 (Sept. 18, 1986)

Where the Bureau of Land Management rejected filings by a mining claimant made on Oct. 22, 1979, of amended location notices for mining claims located in Alaska prior to 1913, which amended notices recited the loss of the original notices of location, rejection of the miner's filing documents was premature where no opportunity was afforded to the claimant to offer secondary proof to establish the asserted foundation of her claims.

Estate of Van Dolah, 94 IBLA 121 (Oct. 9, 1986)

The Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744(b) (1982) and 43 CFR 3833.1-2 require that a mining claimant file with BLM a description of the location of the mining claim sufficient to locate the claimed lands on the ground. This description shall recite, to the extent possible, the section(s), the approximate location of all or any part of the claim to within a 160-acre quadrant of the section (or sections, if more than one is involved), and the township, range, meridian, and State obtained from an official survey plat or other U.S. Government map showing either the surveyed or protracted U.S. Government grid, whichever is applicable. Where a mining claimant fails to provide such a description with the recordation of the claim, BLM may properly require the filing of such a description within a certain period of time. The failure by the mining claimant to comply with such a request may be considered grounds for declaring the claim abandoned and void in accordance with 43 CFR 3833.4(b).

Joe Ostrenger, Jack Stacy, 94 IBLA 229 (Nov. 10, 1986)

The Bureau of Land Management may not reject the filing of a notice of location that was filed before the lands upon which the mining claim was located were the subject of an interim conveyance.

Eskil Anderson, 95 IBLA 253 (Jan. 23, 1987)

BLM may properly require a mineral locator to supply a description of the location of his claim to within a quarter section if this information has not been provided with the filing of a location notice. A locator's failure to properly record a claim may result in a determination that it has been abandoned and is therefore void. However, a locator's failure to file a map or the information required by the regulations is a curable defect, and BLM must notify the claimant and provide an opportunity to supply the information before declaring the claim abandoned and void.

A mining claimant is not required to submit to BLM information sufficiently precise for his claim to be projected onto a township plat. Neither the statute nor the regulations requires a precise map or description of the position of a claim. The test established by statute for the sufficiency of a recorded description is whether the claim may in fact be found and identified on the ground by following the information provided. This is a factual question and unless the description or map is on its face so deficient as to be inadequate as a matter of law, the issue of its sufficiency can be determined only by testing the information in the field.

Because a recorded description and the map filed with BLM are not required to be precise, the uses which may be made of information submitted necessarily depend upon its relative accuracy. If accurate, a map will show the position of a claim in relation to landmarks or the legal boundaries of the public land survey, and may permit BLM to determine that the land on which the claim is located has been withdrawn. But a map is useful only to the extent it accurately represents the territory and claim mapped.

Outline Oil Corp., Mrs. I. M. Feldkamp, Jr., 95 IBLA 255 (Jan. 23, 1987)

An unpatented mining claim must be deemed abandoned and void pursuant to sec. 314(c) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744(c) (1982), where there is no evidence that an instrument of recordation and an initial affidavit of assessment work or notice of intention to hold the claim was filed within the 3-year period following Oct. 21, 1976, by the purported owner of the claim, a predecessor in interest, or an agent.

Mascot Mining, Inc., 95 IBLA 328 (Jan. 30, 1987)

In the case of a mining claim located prior to Oct. 21, 1976, the failure to file one of the instruments required by sec. 314(a) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744(a) (1982), on or before Oct. 22, 1979, and prior to Dec. 31 of every year thereafter in the proper BLM office conclusively constitutes abandonment of the mining claim by the owner and renders the claim void.

Steve E. Cate, 97 IBLA 27 (Apr. 23, 1987)

Where the 90th day following the date of location of a mining claim falls on a Sunday, a day that the proper BLM office for recording such claim is officially closed, recordation is timely if a copy of the official record of the notice or certificate of location is hand delivered on Monday, the 91st day after location.

BLM may properly declare an unpatented mining claim abandoned and void and reject the recordation of affidavits of assessment work where the owner of the claim failed to file a copy of the notice of location for the claim timely with BLM, pursuant to sec. 314(b) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744(b) (1982).

C. Bert Sanger Trust, 97 IBLA 356 (May 26, 1987)

A locator is not required to submit to BLM a precise description of the position of his claims. The test as to whether a recorded description is sufficient is whether the claim may in fact be found and identified by following the recorded description. Because the information provided to BLM is not required to be precise, the uses which may be made of it necessarily depend upon its relative accuracy. Information provided by a locator may be sufficient to meet the statutory requirement yet be insufficient to support a determination that the claim is null and void for being located on previously patented, withdrawn, or reserved land.

United States Borax & Chemical Co., 98 IBLA 358 (July 31, 1987)

The owner of mining claims located after Oct. 21, 1976, must file copies of the notices of location of the claims with BLM within 90 days of the dates of location of the claims, failing which the claims are properly declared abandoned and void.

"Date of location." The date of location of a mining claim is determined in accordance with the law of the state where the claim is situated. Under Utah law, the date of location is that date specified in the notice of location posted on the mining claim and in the copy of the notice of location filed with the county recorder's office.

Joseph L. Frankmore, 101 IBLA 202 (Feb. 22, 1988)

Where it appears that a specifically identified mining claim has been recorded twice with BLM by the same locators, the second time as a relocation, a finding that the claim as relocated is abandoned and void for failure to file evidence of assessment work, on the ground the proof of labor filed with BLM referred only to the serial number assigned to the earlier recordation, will be reversed in the absence of evidence the relocation was adverse to the earlier location rather than an amended location which relates back.

Edward E. Ellis, 101 IBLA 272 (Mar. 10, 1988)

In the case of mining claims located prior to Oct. 21, 1976, failure to file copies of proofs of labor or notices of intent to hold the claims in the proper BLM office on or before Oct. 22, 1979, as required by sec. 314(a) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744(a) (1976), and 43 CFR 3833.2-1(a) (1979), renders the claims abandoned and void.

Henry E. Krizman et al., 104 IBLA 9 (Aug. 15, 1988)

Under 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), an owner of an unpatented mining claim must file evidence of annual assessment work or a notice of intention to hold the claim prior to Dec. 31 of each year. Such filing must be made within each calendar year, i.e., on or after Jan. 1, and on or before Dec. 30. Failure to file within the calendar year results in the claim being extinguished and therefore abandoned and void. In order to constitute a notice of intent to hold, a document filed with BLM must satisfy the requirements of 43 CFR 3833.2-3.

The legal presumption that administrative officials have properly discharged their duties and not lost or misplaced legally significant documents filed with them is rebuttable by probative evidence to the contrary. A copy of a proof of labor with the BLM serial number marked in handwriting, coupled with a statement that the original and the copy were hand delivered to BLM and a written acknowledgement by a BLM employee that the handwriting is her own, are sufficient evidence to establish that the proof of labor was timely filed at the proper BLM office.

Milton E. Kutil, 104 IBLA 396 (Oct. 5, 1988)

Under the provisions of 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), an owner of an unpatented mining claim must file evidence of annual assessment work or a notice of intention to hold the claim prior to Dec. 31 of each year. Such filings must be made within each calendar year, i.e., on or after Jan. 1 and on or before Dec. 30. Failure to file within the calendar year properly results in the claim being deemed abandoned and void.

The recordation provisions of sec. 314 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), apply to claims which, rely on the provisions of 30 U.S.C. § 38 (1982), to prove location and posting. Where such claims have not been duly recorded, they are a nullity.

The provisions of 30 U.S.C. § 38 (1982), permit an individual who has held and worked a claim, as provided therein, to assert a location without the necessity of proving recording and posting. Where, however, placer rights are asserted under this statute, such rights must be based on an asserted placer location. Placer rights do not, through the working of this statute, ever attach to lode locations.

Under 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), the owner of an unpatented mining claim must file evidence of annual assessment work or a notice of intention to hold the claim prior to Dec. 31 of each year. Such filings must be made within each calendar year, i.e., on or after Jan. 1 and on or before Dec. 30. Failure to file within the calendar year properly results in the claim being deemed abandoned and void. Congress assigned the owner of the mining claim the responsibility of making the filings required by 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), and the owner must bear the consequence of filings not timely made. The pendency of contest or condemnation proceedings does not excuse a claim owner from the statutory filing requirements. BLM has no affirmative obligation to send a mining claim owner a reminder notice concerning the need to make annual filings required by 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982).

Jean Emanuel Hatton, Eva M. Pool, Phillip Emanuel, 107 IBLA 47 (Jan. 27, 1989)

Under 43 CFR 3833.0-5(m), "timely filed" means being filed within the time period prescribed by law, or received by Jan. 19, after the period prescribed by law in an envelope bearing a clearly dated postmark affixed by the United States Postal Service within the period prescribed by law. A proof of labor for a mining claim is timely filed when it was received by January 19, at the Nevada State Office and was in an envelope bearing a clearly dated postmark dated Dec. 26, which is within the period prescribed by law, and BLM's decision declaring the claim abandoned and void is properly reversed.

Patrick J. McClain, 109 IBLA 320 (June 21, 1989)

Because a recorded description and the map of a mining claim filed with BLM along with a copy of the notice of location for the claim are not required to be precise, the uses which may be made of the information submitted necessarily depend on its relative accuracy. If accurate, a map will show the position of a claim in relation to landmarks, other claims, or corners of the public land survey, and may permit

RESERVATION AND CONVEYANCE OF MINERAL INTERESTS

BLM may properly reject an application for conveyance of a Federally owned mineral interest (oil and gas) to the owner of the surface estate pursuant to sec. 209(b) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1719(b) (1982), where the applicant has not shown that use of the land for production of avocados is a more beneficial use of the land than mineral development.

RESERVATION AND CONVEYANCE OF MINERAL INTERESTS--Continued

An application for conveyance of mineral interest to the owner of the surface estate pursuant to sec. 209(b) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1719(b) (1982), may be approved where BLM determines (1) that there are no known mineral values in the land, or (2) that the reservation of the mineral rights in the United States is interfering with or precluding appropriate non-mineral development of the land and that such development is a more beneficial use of the land than mineral development. Absent a finding of the existence of one of these conditions, an application is properly rejected.

Temblor Enterprises, Inc., 86 IBLA 175 (Apr. 26, 1985)

An application for conveyance of mineral interests to the owner of the surface estate pursuant to 43 U.S.C. § 1719(b) (1982), may be approved where BLM determines (1) that there are no known mineral values in the land, or (2) that the reservation of the mineral rights in the United States is interfering with or precluding appropriate non-mineral development of the land and that such development is a more beneficial use of the land than mineral development. Absent a finding of the existence of one of these conditions, an application is properly rejected.

Because the definition of "known mineral values" at 43 CFR 2730.0-5(b) includes prospective value, absence of current mineral production provides no basis for concluding that land has no known mineral values in adjudicating an application for conveyance of federally owned mineral interests pursuant to 43 U.S.C. § 1719(b) (1982).

An application for conveyance of a federally owned mineral interest is properly rejected if the applicant fails to provide, pursuant to 43 CFR 2720.1-2(d)(4), as complete a statement as possible concerning (i) the nature of federally reserved or owned mineral values in the land, including explanatory information, (ii) the existing and proposed uses of the land, (iii) why the reservation of the mineral interests in the United States is interfering with or precluding appropriate non-mineral development of the land covered by the application, (iv) how and why such development would be a more beneficial use of the land than its mineral development, and (v) a showing that the proposed use

An application for conveyance of mineral interests to the owner of the surface estate pursuant to sec. 209(b) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1719(b) (1982), may be approved where BLM determines (1) there are no known mineral values in the land, or (2) the reservation of the mineral rights in the United States is interfering with or precluding appropriate nonmineral development of the land and that such development is a more beneficial use of the land than mineral development. Absent a finding of the existence of one of these conditions, an application is properly rejected.

Jean Hubbard Waters, 89 IBLA 179 (Oct. 16, 1985)

An application for conveyance of mineral interest to the owner of the surface estate pursuant to sec. 209(b) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1719(b) (1982), may be approved where BLM determines (1) there are no known mineral values in the land, or (2) the reservation of the mineral rights in the United States is interfering with or precluding appropriate nonmineral development of the land and that such development is a more beneficial use of the land than mineral development. Absent a finding of the existence of one of these conditions, an application is properly rejected.

Where, in adjudicating an application filed pursuant to sec. 209(b) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1719(b) (1982), seeking conveyance of the retained oil and gas interest, BLM makes a determination that the land has known mineral value in that it is prospectively valuable for oil and gas, such determination being based on the fact that the land is in an area of oil and gas drilling activity and is subject to an outstanding Federal oil and gas lease, that determination will not be overcome by a mere allegation that there are no known mineral values in the land.

Richard L. Dickard, Sr., et al., 90 IBLA 83 (Dec. 20, 1985)

Sec. 209(a) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1719 (1982), requires that all conveyances of title issued by the Secretary, with certain express exceptions, reserve to the United States all minerals in the land, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the minerals under applicable law and such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe. The fact that there existed no outstanding mineral interests of record as of the date of patent issuance did not preclude the United States from reserving the mineral interests.

Port Kendall, Inc., 93 IBLA 221 (Aug. 20, 1986)

An application for conveyance of Federally owned mineral interests to the owner of the surface estate pursuant to sec. 209(b) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1719(b) (1982), is properly rejected where the mineral interests are the subject of a valid minerals site right-of-way.

Kenneth L. Ingram et al., 96 IBLA 290 (Mar. 31, 1987)

A decision rejecting an application for conveyance of Federally owned mineral interests under sec. 209(b) of FLPMA because of a finding that the lands applied for have "known mineral values" must be supported by facts of record. If the finding is based solely on an uncorroborated, conclusory memorandum, the decision will be set aside and the matter remanded for readjudication.

When an application for conveyance of a Federally owned mineral interest fails initially to adequately specify why the reservation of mineral interests is interfering with or precluding appropriate nonmineral development of the lands applied for, or how and why such nonmineral development would be a more beneficial use of these lands than mineral development, such failure does not subject the application to automatic rejection. Rather, if BLM determines that the lands applied for possess "known mineral values," BLM should then provide the applicant with an opportunity to make a showing of interference with existing uses, as contemplated by 43 CFR 2720.1-1(a)(2) and 2720.2(d)(4).

Wayne D. Klump et al., 104 IBLA 164 (Sept. 6, 1988)

Where, upon the filing of an application for conveyance of a Federally owned mineral interest, the record shows that the mineral interest previously had been conveyed by the United States to another party, BLM properly rejects the application. However, where the record also shows that the applicant, rather than the patentee, was an existing record owner of the surface estate within the meaning of sec. 209(b)(2) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (FLPMA), 43 U.S.C. § 1719(b)(2) (1982), at the time the United States conveyed the mineral interest, BLM should determine whether the patent may be corrected in accordance with sec. 316 of FLPMA, 43 U.S.C. § 1746 (1982), and failing that, recommend a suit to cancel the patent.

Michael L. Jensen, Jerilee A. Jensen, 105 IBLA 375 (Nov. 29, 1988)

Sec. 209 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (FLPMA), 43 U.S.C. § 1719 (1982), provides that conveyances of title issued by the Department for sales pursuant to sec. 203 of FLPMA, 43 U.S.C. § 1713 (1982), shall reserve to the United States all minerals in the lands, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the minerals under applicable law and such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe. In the absence of regulations expressly approving the location of mining claims for the locatable minerals reserved upon the patenting of lands under sec. 203, mining claims located on such lands are properly declared null and void ab initio.

City of Redding, 91 IBLA 82 (Mar. 11, 1986)

An appraisal of fair market value for a communication site right-of-way will not be set aside on appeal unless an appellant is able to show error in the appraisal method or demonstrate by convincing evidence that charges are excessive. The preferred method for determining the fair market value of nonlinear rights-of-way is the comparable lease appraisal.

Sec. 504(g) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1764(g) (1982), authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to charge less than fair market value for right-of-way rental. However, a for profit business whose principal source of revenue results from subleasing communication facilities is not entitled to a reduction or waiver of a rental fee based on fair market value merely by providing a service to Government agencies or representatives of Government agencies.

FEDERAL LAND POLICY AND MANAGEMENT ACT OF 1976--ContinuedRIGHTS-OF-WAY--Continued

In deciding whether to grant a right-of-way for a storage reservoir for secondary-treated wastewater and a water diversion pipeline, which is planned as part of a larger project involving the treatment and exporting of that wastewater for agricultural reuse after storage, which project is subject to funding or authorization by other Federal agencies, BLM is only responsible for assessing the environmental impact of the right-of-way grant.

In granting a right-of-way for a storage reservoir for secondary-treated wastewater and a water diversion pipeline, BLM may rely on environmental documentation prepared by other agencies to make a convincing case that no significant environmental impact will result, where BLM conducts an independent review of the assessments by the agencies of the environmental impact of the project, and the assessments identify relevant areas of environmental concern, including the threat of groundwater contamination and inundation of cultural resources. However, where BLM fails to incorporate into the grant those measures deemed necessary to mitigate any significant environmental impact, the Board will, rather than set aside the grant, remand the case to BLM for inclusion of appropriate stipulations.

Sierra Club, Inc., et al., 92 IBLA 290 (June 26, 1986)

An appraisal of fair market value for a communication site right-of-way will not be set aside on appeal unless an appellant is able to show error in the appraisal method or demonstrate by convincing evidence that charges are excessive. The preferred method for determining the fair market value of nonlinear rights-of-way is the comparable lease appraisal.

Jancur, Inc., 93 IBLA 310 (Sept. 11, 1986)

Where a rental rate for a linear right-of-way is not established in accordance with a BLM Instruction Memorandum, the BLM decision will be reversed and remanded.

A Bureau of Land Management decision rejecting a road right-of-way application filed pursuant to sec. 501(a) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1761(a) (1982), will be affirmed when the record shows the decision to be a reasoned analysis of the facts involved, made with due regard for the public interest.

Edward J. Connolly, Jr., 94 IBLA 138 (Oct. 21, 1986)

Under the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1761(a) (1982), an application for a right-of-way may be rejected by the Secretary or his duly authorized representative in his discretion. Where the decision is based on a reasoned analysis of factors involved, with due regard for the public interest, a BLM decision to reject an application will be affirmed.

Dale Ludington, 94 IBLA 167 (Oct. 28, 1986)

An appraisal of fair market value for a communication site right-of-way will not be set aside on appeal if an appellant fails to show error in the appraisal methods used or fails to show by convincing evidence that the charges are excessive. In the absence of a preponderance of evidence that a BLM appraisal is erroneous, such an appraisal generally may be rebutted only by another appraisal.

RIGHTS-OF-WAY--Continued

The Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act requires the Secretary of the Interior to manage lands selected by a Native village corporation in accordance with applicable laws and regulations. The Secretary may issue rights-of-way over, upon, under, or through such land pursuant to sec. 501(a) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1761(a) (1982):

BLM's decision granting a right-of-way for water treatment facilities will be affirmed when the record shows the decision to be a reasoned analysis of the factors involved, made with due regard for the public interest, and no sufficient reason to disturb the decision is shown. Under 43 CFR 2650.1(a), the decision to issue such a right-of-way on land selected by a Native village corporation under the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act must consider the views of the village; if the village does not consent to the right-of-way, the Department must balance the public interest against the interests of the village, issuing the right-of-way only if the public interest outweighs the objections of the village.

The municipal holder of a right-of-way for a water treatment plant must pay fair market rental in accordance with sec. 504(g) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1764(g) (1982), if the municipal holder is an instrumentality of a local government and the principal source of the revenue attributable to the service is customer charges.

Title V of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1761-1771 (1982), requires that a right-of-way application be approved prior to transporting water across public land for any mining purpose. Approval of a right-of-way application is within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. A decision by the Secretary's delegate, made in exercise of such discretion, will be affirmed in the absence of sufficient reason to disturb it.

Departmental precedent and regulations establish that sec. 28 of the Mineral Leasing Act of 1920, as amended, provides the proper authority for issuance of pipeline rights-of-way for transportation of gas produced from Federal oil and gas leases. Where the pipeline is constructed off-lease, this is true regardless of whether the pipeline facility is characterized as a gathering line or production facility on the one hand or a pipeline for transportation of gas to market on the other hand. This interpretation of sec. 28 of the Mineral Leasing Act is consistent with the intent of that provision to ensure the ability of Federal oil and gas lessees to develop their leases and market the products of lease development.

Sec. 28 of the Mineral Leasing Act of 1920, as amended, 30 U.S.C. § 185 (1982), authorizing rights-of-way for "natural gas" pipelines, provides the proper statutory authority for a right-of-way for a pipeline to transport all component gases produced from a well on Federal oil and gas leases, including a pipeline exclusively devoted to transportation of carbon dioxide subsequently separated from the other components of the gas stream emanating from the wellhead. This interpretation of sec. 28 of the Mineral Leasing Act is consistent with the intent of that provision to ensure the ability of Federal oil and gas lessees to develop their leases and market the products of lease development.

Where BLM grants a communication site right-of-way under sec. 501 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1761 (1982) and the grantee fails to file an application for assignment as required by 43 CFR 2803.6-3, rental resulting from a subsequent appraisal may be properly assessed against the grantee. The period of assessment properly included that period the grantee, under a private arrangement, allowed another party to use the right-of-way.

Rejection of an application for a right-of-way for road access across Federal lands not under lease to a drill site on a Federal oil and gas lease may be reasonable where it is filed too close to the expiration date of the lease (after which the right-of-way would be meaningless) to allow processing consistent with the Department's statutory obligations under the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 and the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976. However, where an application for suspension of operations is filed prior to lease expiration to obtain time for approval of the right-of-way, rejection of the right-of-way application will be set aside as premature in the absence of an adjudication of the request for suspension.

John March, 98 IBLA 143 (June 22, 1987)

Where a right-of-way applicant was charged $375 for 5-years use of a linear road right-of-way, contrary to provision of a Bureau of Land Management Instruction Memorandum requiring that new linear rights-of-way should be charged a minimum rental of $25 for 5 years pending final approval of regulations implementing a uniform system of appraisal for such rights-of-way, the decision establishing the $375 rate must be vacated.

Where there is an indication in the case file that a road for which an application for a right-of-way has been made may be an existing public highway, a decision establishing a rental charge for use of the right-of-way is vacated and the case file remanded for further fact-finding to determine whether the road right-of-way is properly subject to any rental charge.

If a rental charge required by 43 CFR 2803.1-2 is not paid when due, and such default continues for 30 days after notice, BLM may take action to terminate a right-of-way grant issued pursuant to Title V of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. §§ 1761-1771 (1982). When the holder of a right-of-way grant has not paid rent for over 2 years, BLM may properly terminate the right-of-way grant.

Also, the authorized officer is required to issue a deficiency notice when he finds the information supplied is incomplete or not in conformance with the law. However, the authorized officer is not required to request further information prior to issuance of a deficiency notice.

A right-of-way application for a wind farm is a request for a non-linear right-of-way, and, therefore, processing fee requirements are governed by 43 CFR 2803.1-1(a)(3)(ii). Where BLM requests submission of additional fees to cover processing costs for such a non-linear right-of-way, and the applicant fails to pay such fees, a BLM decision rejecting the application for failure to make additional payment will be upheld on appeal.

An appraisal of fair market value for a communication site right-of-way will not be set aside on appeal if an appellant fails to show the rental rate is excessive. Absent a showing that appraisal methods used to set the rental rate are incorrect, a BLM appraisal may, in general, only be rebutted by another appraisal.

Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad Co., 101 IBLA 252 (Feb. 29, 1988)

One who has not participated in the decision-making process prior to a BLM decision concerning action affecting closure of a public right-of-way is not a "party to a case" within the meaning of 43 CFR 4.410(a). A decision of BLM to issue a right-of-way for a waste water injection well on public land where the mineral estate is held by private parties will be affirmed in accordance with the general rule in American law that once minerals have been removed from the ground the void formerly occupied by the minerals reverts to the surface owner in the absence of any controlling precedent to the contrary.

An appraisal of the fair market value of a right-of-way will not be set aside on appeal if appellant fails to show error in the appraisal methods used or fails to show by convincing evidence that charges are excessive. In the absence of a showing that the appraisal methods used by BLM are incorrect, an appraisal may be rebutted only by another appraisal.

Generally, the Board of Land Appeals will uphold a BLM appraisal of a right-of-way unless it can be shown that BLM has failed to apply the proper criteria when calculating the fair market value right-of-way rental or the resulting charges are shown to be excessive. Absent error in the appraisal methods utilized, an appellant is normally required to submit another appraisal in order to present sufficiently convincing evidence that the rental charges are excessive.

Generally, the proper appraisal analysis method for determining the fair market rental value of non-linear rights-of-way is a site-specific analysis of comparable sites with adjustment for variances in the site conditions.

BLM may reduce rental payments for communication site rights-of-way if it determines that the imposition of the fair market value rental would cause an undue hardship on the right-of-way holder or applicant.

Nothing in the general mining laws invests individuals who reside on patented mineral land with a right of access across Federal land, when it appears from the record that the land is not subject to mineral exploration and development.

When individuals who gain access to private property by means of a timber road across Federal lands fail to maintain the road so as to prevent damage to the road and the surrounding environment, BLM properly terminates their use of the road under the "casual use" regulations, 43 CFR 2800.0-5(m). Where private landowners' use of a BLM road does not qualify as casual use under the regulations, they must obtain a right-of-way grant pursuant to sec. 501 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1761 (1982), in order to continue to use the road.

SALES

Where in 1964 a tract of public land was offered for public sale pursuant to 43 U.S.C. § 1171 and the adjacent landowners were declared the purchasers, but the sale was subsequently vacated and all money reimbursed by a decision which afforded them the right of appeal, and where no appeal was taken and 43 U.S.C. § 1171 was thereafter repealed, the decision became final and no residual rights under that sale or the repealed statute survived. Therefore, a protest by these same landowners against the re-offering of this tract for sale pursuant to 43 U.S.C. § 1713, based on their asserted priority at the 1964 sale, is properly dismissed.

Under sec. 203(f) of FLPMA, 43 U.S.C. § 1713(f) (1982) and 43 CFR 2711.3-2, the Bureau of Land Management is authorized to offer land for sale by a modified competitive bidding procedure which adequately accommodates the preference rights of the adjacent landowners where they all have an equal opportunity to submit sealed bids for a small parcel that does not lend itself to a division among the adjoining landowners and the record does not support a direct sale to any one of the preference bidders.

Where the regulations in 43 CFR 2711.1-2(a) governing a notice of realty action for public sale require that a notice identifying a tract for sale be sent to parties in interest by BLM 60 days prior to the sale, and provide for a 45-day comment period, a notice not timely sent to an interested party will not negate the sale where the party asserting the deficiency had actual notice of the sale, had an opportunity to comment and participate in the sale, and was not prejudiced by BLM's failure to provide a timely notice.

Richard D. & Virginia Troon, Alan & Judith A. Gallion, 93 IBLA 256 (Aug. 27, 1986)

A decision to include public lands within a parcel for sale under sec. 203 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1713 (1982), where the decision is based upon first-hand knowledge of the land and on substantial evidence, will be affirmed unless appellant presents a preponderance of evidence to support a contrary result.

Competitive bidding procedures are mandated for public sales under sec. 203 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1713 (1982), unless equitable considerations or public policies indicate modified competitive bidding or noncompetitive bidding procedures may be employed. Where the lands to be sold are within a developing or urbanizing area, competitive bidding procedures may be appropriate even though an adjoining landowner protests on the grounds

Dean M. Anderson, 94 IBLA 88 (Sept. 30, 1986)

Under sec. 203 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1713 (1982), and applicable regulations, BLM may resolve an unauthorized use of public land by private, noncompetitive sale of the parcel. It is within the discretion of the authorized officer to exclude from sale lands considered to have wetland and riparian values and to retain such lands in public ownership.

C. Sody Soderstrom, 95 IBLA 382 (Feb. 20, 1987)

When BLM determines to sell a tract of public land because the land is difficult and uneconomic to manage, one of the standards for disposal set forth in sec. 203(a) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1713(a) (1982), and that determination is protested by a group holding grazing permits for such land, the decision denying the protest will be set aside where the group alleges the land is not difficult and uneconomic to manage and there is a lack of substantial evidence in the record to support BLM's determination.

Washboard Permittee Group, 99 IBLA 10 (Aug. 12, 1987)

Where an individual files an "appeal" with BLM of a notice of a proposed direct sale of certain public lands, that filing is not an appeal under 43 CFR 4.410; rather, it is a protest, which, under 43 CFR 4.450-2, is any objection to any action proposed to be taken by BLM.

BLM may properly decide to make a direct sale of an isolated parcel of public land to an existing grazing user, who is also one of the adjoining landowners, rather than engage in regular or modified competitive bidding, under sec. 203(f) of the Federal

SALES--Continued

Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1713(f) (1982).

Kenneth W. Bosley, 99 IBLA 327 (Oct. 29, 1987)

Under 43 CFR 4.410, standing to appeal is limited to a party to the case adversely affected by the decision appealed from. A party who expresses no intention to purchase an isolated tract of Federal land by submitting a competitive bid on the tract lacks standing to appeal the manner in which the sale is conducted.

Kenneth W. Bosley, 101 IBLA 52 (Jan. 26, 1988)

A notice of realty action issued by the Bureau of Land Management to notify the public of a proposed direct sale of public land and to solicit comments on the proposal is not a decision subject to appeal under 43 CFR 4.410, since it is merely an announcement of action proposed to be taken.

Although a person who files a protest to a proposed direct sale of public land becomes a party to a case within the meaning of 43 CFR 4.410 when the protest is denied and a timely appeal is filed, in order to maintain an appeal, the person must show an interest which has been adversely affected by the decision.

Kenneth W. Bosley, 102 IBLA 235 (May 19, 1988)

Under the circumstances of this case it was proper for BLM to assign a highest and best use as "rural industrial" to remote lands upon which appellant was building a natural gas processing plant pursuant to a right-of-way. During the life of the right-of-way and prior to appraisal, appellant purchased two adjacent parcels at prices reflecting a rural industrial character, and the purchases were made for fair market value.

When determining fair market value of a Federal tract, those additional costs that a purchaser would normally incur when purchasing the land from the

SALES--Continued

Federal rather than the private sector should be taken into consideration. This fact can be recognized by making a reasonable adjustment to the purchase price of comparable private tracts to reflect the fact that, in an open market, a purchaser will pay a lower purchase price for a tract of land if additional acquisition costs can reasonably be expected.

Exxon Corp., 106 IBLA 207 (Dec. 21, 1988)

It was proper for BLM to cancel a sale of public land following acceptance of high bids when the sale was found to be contrary to an injunction entered in Nat'l Wildlife Federation v. Burford, 676 F. Supp. 280 (D.D.C. 1986), aff'd, 835 F.2d 305 (D.C. Cir. 1987). In such case a refund of deposits submitted with the high bids was proper. However, in the absence of express statutory authority, no interest on the funds deposited may be paid by BLM.

Gordon L. Hardy, 106 IBLA 227 (Dec. 27, 1988)

BLM's failure to send a notice to the co-owner of an adjoining parcel of land as required by 43 CFR 2711.1-2(a) will not vitiate a public sale of the parcel by modified competitive bidding procedure where the co-owner had actual knowledge of the sale prior to the sale date and subsequently participated in the sale.

The failure of a high bidder to include proof of United States citizenship with a sealed bid is a curable defect not requiring rejection of a bid submitted pursuant to modified competitive bidding procedures.

Stephen J. Stagnaro et al., 107 IBLA 323 (Mar. 8, 1989)

Under the provisions of 43 CFR 2711.3-3(d) and 43 CFR 2711.3-1(f) and (g), a direct sale of public land may not, as a general rule, be cancelled after BLM has accepted the tender of the purchase price.

"Adjoining landowners." The term "adjoining landowners," as used in 43 CFR 2711.1-2(b), does not include individuals who own cornering lands, since in the administration of the public land laws the terms "contiguous" or "adjoining" have been consistently defined and construed to exclude "cornering" lands.

Henry J. Warmuth, 108 IBLA 130 (Apr. 3, 1989)

Sec. 209 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (FLPMA), 43 U.S.C. § 1719 (1982), provides that conveyances of title issued by the Department for sales pursuant to sec. 203 of FLPMA, 43 U.S.C. § 1713 (1982), shall reserve to the United States all minerals in the lands, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the minerals under applicable law and such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe. In the absence of regulations expressly approving the location of mining claims for the locatable minerals reserved upon the patenting of lands under sec. 203, mining claims located on such lands are properly declared null and void ab initio.

SURFACE MANAGEMENT

Under the regulations adopted by the Bureau of Land Management, the authorized officer has no authority to approve or disapprove the contents of a notice of intent to commence mining operations filed under 43 CFR 3809.1-3(a). Therefore, where an operator has failed to timely file pursuant to that section, a notice of noncompliance may be issued, but such notice is necessarily limited in scope to requiring the operator to submit a notice.

Pursuant to 43 CFR 3809.3-2(d), a notice of non-compliance properly issues upon a determination that a use to which a mining claim may properly be put is occurring in such a manner as to result in unnecessary or undue degradation of the land.

While mining claimants are required to obtain all necessary state permits relating to mining activities, a notice of noncompliance based on the failure to obtain such permits can only be sustained where the authorized officer delineates exactly which permits were required and provides sufficient factual background to support this conclusion.

Bruce W. Crawford et ux., 86 IBLA 350 (May 17, 1985)

Application of the "unnecessary or undue degradation" standard presumes the validity of the use which is causing the impact and seeks to determine whether the impact is greater than should be expected to occur if the activity were conducted by a prudent operator in the usual, customary, and proficient conduct of similar operations.

When BLM determines, after such notice and opportunity for hearing as may be required by due process, that a mining claim is not supported by a discovery of a valuable mineral deposit, it may declare that mining claim null and void and reject a proposed plan of operations submitted for that claim.

WILDERNESS

Where the record evidences BLM's firsthand knowledge of the lands within an inventory unit and contains comments from the public as to the area's fitness for wilderness preservation, BLM's subjective judgments of the unit's naturalness, qualities and whether an inventory unit possesses outstanding opportunities for solitude or a primitive and unconfined type of recreation are entitled to considerable deference.

In assessing the presence or absence of wilderness characteristics in an inventory unit, BLM necessarily makes subjective judgments which are entitled to considerable deference when challenged on appeal and such judgments may not be overcome simply by expressions of disagreement.

A BLM decision to eliminate an inventory unit from further consideration as a wilderness study area, pursuant to sec. 603(a) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1782(a) (1982), will be set aside and the case remanded to BLM where, on appeal, the appellant raises substantial questions concerning the adequacy of BLM's consideration of whether the unit has the requisite naturalness or outstanding opportunities for solitude or a primitive and unconfined type of recreation, and the record does not adequately support BLM's conclusions on these matters.

Committee for Idaho's High Desert, 85 IBLA 54 (Feb. 11, 1985)

Evaluations made by BLM personnel in the wilderness inventory process are necessarily subjective and judgmental. The conclusions reached must be accorded considerable deference notwithstanding the result might be one over which reasonable men could differ. An appellant seeking reversal must ordinarily show either a clear error of law or a demonstrable error of fact.

Committee for Idaho's High Desert, The Wilderness Society, 85 IBLA 112 (Feb. 14, 1985)

In assessing the presence or absence of wilderness characteristics in an inventory unit, BLM necessarily makes subjective judgments which are entitled to considerable deference when challenged on appeal and such judgments may not be overcome simply by expressions of disagreements.

A BLM decision based on reassessment of the wilderness characteristics of a unit will be reversed where it is established that BLM failed properly to reassess the unit, and it is also established that such failure caused BLM to reach an incorrect conclusion.

WILDERNESS--Continued

A BLM decision regarding competing uses of public land that is based on a consideration of all relevant factors and is supported by the record will not be disturbed on appeal absent a showing of compelling reasons for modification or reversal. Relevant factors for consideration in a BLM decision opening an area of the Panamint Dunes within a wilderness study area in the California Desert Conservation Area to off-road vehicle use are whether such activity will impair the area's suitability for wilderness preservation or whether unnecessary or undue degradation of the lands and their resources will take place. Where the record does not support the opening because of the potential for unnecessary degradation of cultural resources, the decision will be reversed.

Wilderness Society et al., 90 IBLA 221 (Jan. 30, 1986)

The intent of the regulations limiting standing to appeal to a party to the case is to afford a rational framework for administrative decisionmaking on the assumption that the initial decisionmaker will have had the benefit of the input of such a party in reaching its decision. Where a party has actively participated in the consideration of an inventory unit for eligibility as a wilderness study area has requested in writing the opportunity to comment on applications for permit to drill (APD's) filed for lands within the unit, and has been recognized by the Bureau of Land Management as a party wishing to have input in the process of adjudicating APD's filed for lands within the unit, it is entitled to notice of the filing of those APD's, and it will be recognized as a party to the case on appeal of decisions granting APD's within the unit.

Beartooth Oil & Gas Co., 94 IBLA 115 (Oct. 9, 1986)

Where an oil and gas lease, issued after the enactment of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, embraces lands within a wilderness study area and the lessee is denied an application for permit to drill for failure to meet the nonimpairment standard, a subsequent request for suspension of operations and production will be adjudicated on the basis of whether or not at the time of issuance BLM encumbered the lease with a wilderness protection or no-surface-occupancy stipulation. The suspension policy, as set forth in the "Interim Management Policy and Guidelines for Lands under Wilderness Review," is to grant a suspension for such a lease issued without either of those stipulations.

BLM may properly reject a proposed modification of an approved plan of operations, seeking to engage in open pit mining within a wilderness study area, where the record establishes that the proposed operation would impair the naturalness of the study area. In addition, BLM may properly require the mining claimant to undertake reclamation of any area affected by unauthorized mining operations.

L. C. Artman et al., 98 IBLA 164 (June 24, 1987)

No violation of the nonimpairment policy set forth in sec. 603(c) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1782(c) (1982), is established by BLM's grant of a right-of-way across public lands adjacent to a wilderness study area where the right-of-way will permit the developer of a hydro-electric concern to convey water diverted from a river entering the wilderness study area.

California Wilderness Coalition et al., 98 IBLA 314 (July 30, 1987)

A BLM decision to designate certain roads within the King Range National Conservation Area as open to unrestricted or limited vehicle use by the general public will not be disturbed on appeal absent a showing of compelling reasons for modification or reversal. However, where a portion of the King Range has been designated a wilderness study area, relevant factors for consideration of whether to open the area to off-road vehicle use must include whether such activity will impair the area's suitability for wilderness preservation or whether unnecessary or undue degradation of the lands and their resources will take place. Where the record does not support the road opening because it reveals the threat of unnecessary degradation of the natural and cultural resources, the decision will be reversed.

California Wilderness Coalition et al., 101 IBLA 18 (Jan. 25, 1988)

WILDERNESS--Continued

The Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, 43 U.S.C. § 1782(c) (1982), requires the Secretary to regulate mining operations on lands under wilderness review to prevent impairment of the suitability of these areas for potential inclusion in the wilderness system. However, if mining operations on such lands may continue, if the operations are occurring in the same manner and degree as on Oct. 21, 1976. A mining plan of operations for claims located after Oct. 21, 1976, even though those claims embrace the same lands covered by different claims located prior to Oct. 21, 1976, cannot be considered to be a continuation of any operations undertaken pursuant to the previous claims and cannot qualify for the less restrictive management standard.

Approval of a mining plan of operations for post-FLPMA mining claims within a wilderness study area may properly be denied when planned road building and blasting impacts could not be rendered substantially unnoticeable before a final wilderness designation decision is made.

Eugene Mueller, 103 IBLA 308 (Aug. 4, 1988)

A mining claim located in a wilderness study area after Oct. 21, 1976, is subject to provision of 43 U.S.C. § 1782(c) (1982), requiring that the land be managed to prevent impairment of the area for wilderness preservation. Where a mining claim located prior to Oct. 21, 1976, becomes abandoned and void for failure to comply with the recordation provisions of 43 U.S.C. § 1744 (1982), a mining claim located in 1979 covering the same area as the void claim is subject to the nonimpairment standard imposed upon claims located in wilderness study areas after Oct. 21, 1976, by 43 U.S.C. § 1782(c) (1982).

BLM may properly reject a proposal in a mining plan of operations to construct a road within a wilderness study area when the record supports the conclusion that the road would impair the suitability of the area for preservation as wilderness, contrary to provision of 43 U.S.C. § 1782(c) (1982).

In a petition for reconsideration of a Board decision closing roads within the King Range Wilderness Study Area to off-road vehicle use, BLM offered new evidence to show that it increased its law enforcement capability in the area and has purchased property in order to better control illegal off-road vehicle use. In consideration of the new evidence tending to show that BLM will be better able to control off-road traffic as a result, the Board's prior decision will be vacated in part where the evidence shows that these measures will protect against the impact of off-road vehicle use on the natural and cultural resources of the wilderness study area.

California Wilderness Coalition et al. (On Reconsideration), 105 IBLA 196 (Nov. 2, 1988)

The Interim Management Policy and Guidelines for Lands Under Wilderness Review are binding on all BLM State offices. No decision in conflict with the Interim Management Policy and Guidelines for Lands Under Wilderness Review may be sustained on appeal in the absence of an express justification in the record for the failure to follow the policy guidelines established by the Interim Management Policy and Guidelines for Lands Under Wilderness Review.

The Wilderness Society, 106 IBLA 46 (Dec. 8, 1988)

A notice of noncompliance issued to an operator conducting operations under an approved plan of operations for failure to comply with 43 CFR 3802.4-6, will be vacated even though the operator's attitude at different times appeared to BLM to be hostile, abusive, and confrontational where the record shows that the authorized officer was able to make regular compliance investigations of the site, and held telephone conversations with the operator about his mining activities.

An operator conducting operations under an approved plan of operations is required under 43 CFR 3802.4-7 to notify the authorized officer of any suspension of operations within 30 days after such suspension. Where evidence offered on appeal shows that operations are continuing, the lack of activity observed between a 30-day period by itself is insufficient to subject the operator to the notice requirement of the regulation, and a notice of non-compliance issued for failure to give such notice will not be sustained on appeal.

Mining operations within wilderness study areas must be conducted under properly filed and approved plans of operations. Where a claimant appeals a notice of noncompliance, and on review the record establishes that operations being conducted exceed those authorized by BLM, and described in the plan of operations, the case will be remanded for the filing of a proper plan of operations and the posting of bond to ensure reclamation of the site after operations are completed.

Where an R.S. 2477 right-of-way is found to exist across public lands for a county road bordering WSAs, the right to maintain and improve that right-of-way, measured by what is reasonable and necessary in light of preexisting uses of the road at the time of repeal of R.S. 2477, constitutes a valid existing right under FLPMA. Notwithstanding this limitation on the authority of BLM, the obligation of BLM under sec. 603(c) of FLPMA to manage the public lands so as to avoid unnecessary and undue degradation of WSAs may require preparation of an environmental assessment with respect to the impact of construction of road improvements proposed by the county to ascertain whether they may involve any unnecessary or undue degradation to WSAs which would require preparation of an environmental impact statement.
